Apthorp, East, 1733-1816. Discourses on prophecy
DISCOURSES ON PROPHECY:

READ IN THE CHAPEL OF LINCOLN'S-INN,

AT THE LECTURE

FOUNDED BY THE RIGHT REVEREND WILLIAM WARBURTON, LATE LORD BISHOP OF GLOUCESTER.

BY EAST APTHORP, D.D. RECTOR OF ST. MARY LE BOW.

VOL. II.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR J. F. AND C. RIVINGTON, NO. 62, ST. PAUL'S CHURCH YARD.

MDCCCLXXXVI.
CONTENTS
OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

DISCOURSE VII.

PROPHECIES OF THE DEATH OF CHRIST.

Isaiah liii.

ANALYSIS of the Book of Isaiah
chh. xl—lxvi.
Illustration of the three last Verses of the liid Chapter
I. Illustration of Ch. liii. \(v. \) 1
---------- of \(v. \) 2
---------- of \(v. \) 3
---------- of \(v. \) 4
---------- of \(v. \) 5
---------- of \(v. \) 6
---------- of \(v. \) 7
---------- of \(v. \) 8
---------- of \(v. \) 9
---------- of \(v. \) 10
---------- of \(v. \) 11
---------- of \(v. \) 12

Page

3 6 9 11 14 15
19 26 27 30 31
33 36 40

II. De-
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>II. Demonstration of the truth of Christianity from this Prophecy</td>
<td>45</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III. Demonstration of Christ's satisfaction from this Prophecy</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proofs and Illustrations, with Extracts from Grotius de Satisfacione Christi</td>
<td>57</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DISCOURSE VIII.

Prophecies of the Kingdom of Christ.

Psalm II.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Evolution of the Double Sense of this Psalm</td>
<td>80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>as resulting from the Jewish Theocracy</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>First Proof of Christ's Divine Kingdom, drawn from the persecutions of his Church</td>
<td>99</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Guilt and Danger of Opposition to Christianity</td>
<td>109</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Proofs and Illustrations</td>
<td>114</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

DISCOURSE IX.

Prophecies of the Kingdom of Christ.

Psalm II.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Extent of Empire, and Universality of Religion, both contrary to the Jewish constitution</td>
<td>129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>But</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
CONTENTS.

But both predicted of the Christian Religion, and verified in the conversion of the World 133

Origin and Progress of Christianity ibid.
The Apostolic Churches 135

Psalm LXXII illustrated 137—141

The Age of Constantine 146

The Conversion of the Barbarians 147

Predictions of the Ancient Prophets, of Jesus Christ, and of St. John, accomplished, and accomplishing 153

APPENDIX. An abridged View of the distinct National Conversions in their Geographical Order, from Fabricius, Lux Salutaris Evangelii, &c. 162—184

DISCOURSE X.

CHARACTERS OF ANTICHRIST.

Isaiah lvii.

Scope of this Part of Isaiah's Prophecies 185

The dismembering of the Roman Empire 187

Causes of the Corruption of Christianity,

1. The Temporal Splendour of the Church 189

2. The decline of Learning 190

Origin and Progress of the Papal Supremacy 193

Its Excesses instanced in

Gregory VII. 199

Innocent III. 203

Charac-
CONTENTS

Characters of Antichrist:

1. Insolence of Power .................................................. 209
2. Idolatry ........................................................................ 210
3. Persecution .................................................................. 211
4. The Papal Supremacy .................................................. 212
5. Mercenary Superstition .................................................. 214
6. The Doctrine of Merit .................................................... 215
7. Military and Ecclesiastical Fraternities .......................... 216

Opposite Characters of the Reformation ............................ 218

- founded in the Renunciation of Merit .............................. 219
- and of Venal Superstition .............................................. 220

Its Genuine Effects, Virtue, Liberty and Peace ................. 222

Illustrations, containing Proofs of the Papal Tyranny, and Superstition .................................................. 224

DISCOURSE XI.

THE MYSTIC TYRE.

EZEKIEL xxviii.

| Idea of the Mystic Allegory, from Maimonides | 240 |
| Historic completion of Ezekiel's Prophecy | 243 |
| Mystic import of the Tyrian Commerce | 245 |
| Farther Illustration of the Mystic Allegory | 254 |
| Instanced in the Deification of the Pope's Person | 257 |

Ezekiel's
CONTENTS

Ezekiel's Prophecy explained and applied 259
The Ruin of the Mystic Tyre 267 probably by Earthquakes, Submersion, Volcanoes and subterraneous Fires 271 Scope of these Predictions. 277
Illustrations of the Text of Ezekiel, of the Mystic Import, and of the probable Event with respect to Rome and the Ecclesiastical State 279—296

DISCOURSE XII.

ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE REFORMATION.

Revelation x. 7.

Canonical Authority, Scope, and Subject of the Revelation of St. John 297
Illustration of the Tenth Chapter 391
The Christian Religion is progressive 308
It is the Duty of the Protestant Churches and of Private Christians to advance its Progression. 310
Error of the Chiliafts 311
True Idea of the Felicity of the Church of Christ, as consisting in Holiness and Peace. 314

5 Favour-
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Favourable circumstances,</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. The Decline of Popery</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II. The Civil State of the World</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Means of Progression in Religion and Felicity:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>I. The civilization of Barbarous Nations</td>
<td>322</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>II. The emendation of the Protestant Churches</td>
<td>330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Specified in respect to the several Corruptions in Manners and Principles foretold by Isaiah and St. John.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>III. Conversion of Heathens, Jews, and Mohammedans</td>
<td>339</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Utility and happy Effects of Christianity</td>
<td>342</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recapitulation</td>
<td>344</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ILLUSTRATIONS, on the Improvement of Society, and the Advancement of Learning</td>
<td>353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TABLES OF CHRONOLOGY adapted to the Prophetic Era of the New Testament</td>
<td>375—382</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
DISCOURSE VII.

PROPHECIES

OF THE

DEATH OF CHRIST.

Isaiah LIII.

1. Who hath believed our report?
   And to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?

2. For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant,
   And as a root out of a dry ground:
   He hath no form nor comeliness:
   And when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desirè him.

3. He is despised and rejected of men,
   A man of sorrows & acquainted with grief;
   And we hid as it were our faces from him:
   He was despised, and we esteemed him not.

4. Surely he hath borne our griefs,
   And carried our sorrows:
   Yet we did esteem him stricken,
   Smitten of God, and afflicted.

5. But
DISCOURSE VII.

5. But he was wounded for our transgressions,
   He was bruised for our iniquities:
   The chastisement of our peace was upon him;
   And with his stripes we are healed.

6. All we like sheep have gone astray;
   We have turned every one to his own way:
   And the Lord hath laid on him
   The iniquity of us all.

7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted,
   Yet he opened not his mouth:
   He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter,
   And as a sheep before her shearsers is dumb,
   So he openeth not his mouth.

8. He was taken from prison and from judgment:
   And who shall declare his generation?
   For he was cut off out of the land of the living:
   For the transgression of my people was he stricken.

9. And he made his grave with the wicked,
   And with the rich in his death;
   Because he had done no violence,
   Neither was there any deceit in his mouth.

10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him,
    He hath put him to grief.
DISCOURSE VII.

When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin,
He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days,
And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

11. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied:
By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many;
For he shall bear their iniquities.

12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great,
And he shall divide the spoil with the strong:
Because he hath poured out his Soul unto death:
And he was numbered with the transgressors;
And he bare the sin of many,
And made intercession for the transgressors.

The last great division of the Book of Isaiah begins at the xlixth Chapter, and consists of Five Discourses, including a methodical detail of the fortunes of the Christian Church.
The subject of the First of these Divine Discoveries, is the Conversion of the Gentile Church. Chh.xlix,L.1—3.

The Second, in Chh.L.4.—LI.16. respects the different conduct of the Jewish people in rejecting or receiving the Messiah, the abolition of the Jewish economy, and the victory of Christ over the enemies of his Church.

The Third Discourse, Chh.LI.17.—LX. includes a vast compass of great events: §. 1. The afflicted state of the Church before the coming of Christ, the happy change induced by his Advent, and the Kingdom of Christ founded on his Passion¹: §. 2. which is described in all its circumstances, causes, and effects²: §. 3. The vast enlargement of his Church by the accession of the Gentiles³. §. 4. An admonition to the Jewish Nation to accept the Gospel by Faith and Repentance, and a declaration of the design of imparting it to the Gentiles⁴. §. 5. Admonition to preserve the Purity of the Gospel.

¹ Chh. li. liii. ² liii. ³ liv. ⁴ lv. whose
DISCOURSE VII.

whose privileges are universal, without exclusion of any Nation or Person. §. 6. The Corruption of the Church by Antichrist, and the origin and purity of the Reformation. §. 7. The Corruptions of the Reformed Church in morals and principles, and the Calamities consequent on those corruptions. §. 8. The interposition of the Son of God in behalf of his Church, labouring under intestine disorders and external hostilities. §. 9. The glorious event of that interposition, in the future purity peace and universality of the Christian Church.

In the Fourth Discourse, Chh. LXi. Lxii. the Prophet illustrates the foregoing topics, through the several periods of the Church.

In the Fifth Discourse, Chh. Lxiii.—Lxvi. he induces the Son of God in his celestial panoply, as the Deliverer of his Church from Edom or Antichrist. The contrition of the Jews for their rejection 5 Chh. Ivi. 6 lvi. 9.—lvii. 7 lviii. lix. 15. 8 lix. 15.—21. 9 lx. 10 lxiii.

of the Messiah: a Vindication of the conduct of Divine Providence, and its merciful intentions towards that Nation: and the whole Prophecy ends magnificently, in declaring the interior excellencies of that pure Christianity, which is alone acceptable to God; his disregard of mere externals; the amplitude, the glory, and eternal Sanctions of the Gospel.

The Three last verses of the Lxiv. Chapter briefly propose the same argument, which is amply displayed in the whole of the Lxvi. It declares both the dignity and extreme humiliation of the Saviour, the efficacy of his Sacrifice, and the prevalence of his Religion.

13. Behold my servant shall deal prudently,
He shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.
14. As many were astonished at thee;
(His visage was so marred more than any man,
And his form more than the sons of men:)
10 Chh. lxiv. 11 lxv. 12 lxvi.
15. So shall he sprinkle many nations:

The kings shall shut their mouths at him:

For that which had not been told them they shall see,

And that which they had not heard shall they consider.

Our admiration is excited, by the dignity and excellencies of this Servant of God, by his extreme humiliation, by the efficacy of his Redemption, and by the complete establishment of his Religion. Behold my Servant shall deal prudently. The personal character, my servant, runs through the whole prediction, and is the true key to it. The Jewish paraphrase, nearly contemporary with Christ himself, rightly interprets it, My Servant the Messiah. He shall deal prudently, and display the Divine Wisdom in the whole process of Redemption. He shall be exalted, by rising from death; extolled, in his coming to judgment; and high in the conversion and soverainty of the world.

The Jews were astonished at the stumbling-block of his Cross; yet his blood shall sprinkled sprinkle and expiate the Nations: the Gentile kings shall revoke their persecuting edicts; they shall learn a doctrine before unknown, and with their people become the willing Subjects of a crucified Redeemer.

The Jews, disappointed in their expectations of a Temporal Saviour, have long since attempted to explain the personal characters of this prophecy in a national sense, as respecting the Jewish people at large, or the pious and faithful part of them, whether in their former captivity or their present dispersion. We shall occasionally shew the absurdity of this fiction as we procceed in our commentary on this noble instance of a literal prophecy, which admits of but one application or completion.
For that any other person was the subject of it, as Cyrus, or Josiah, or Jeremiah, is hardly so probable, as to divide our attention: which will be decided, as to the true import of the character and doctrine of this Prophecy, by the authority of the Ch. LIII begins with an exclamation of the Apostles and Evangelists, complaining of the infidelity of the Jewish people: of the inefficacy of Christ's personal ministry, and that of his Apostles, to convert that nation, especially the more eminent and powerful part of them:

v. 1. Who hath believed our Report?

And to whom hath the Arm of the Lord been revealed?

By the Report of his Evangelists we may understand the Prophet to intend the Doctrine of Christ, and by the Arm of the Lord his Miracles: agreeable to the testimony of St. Paul, But they have not all obeyed the gospel; for Esaias faith, Lord, who hath believed our report? and of St. John, But though he had done so many miracles before them, yet they believed not on him. And this Evangelist assigns the Causes of their unbelief, in a passage too memorable to be omitted in this place. That the saying of Esaias the prophet might be fulfilled which he spake: *Lord, who hath believed our report? and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed?

Therefore,
Therefore, they could not believe, because that Esaias said again, He hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts; that they should not see with their eyes, nor understand with their heart, and be converted, and I should heal them. These things said Esaias when he saw his glory and spake of him. One principal cause of the incredulity of the Jews, was that Inattention to the prophetic characters and descriptions of Christ, which induced both a moral stupor and judicial blindness; which are the just gradations of Unbelief. To these the Evangelist adds another cause, the dissembling and suppressing their conviction and belief, through worldly and interested motives. Nevertheless among the chief rulers also, many believed on him; but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue: for they loved the praise of men, more than the praise of God. Such are the general causes of infidelity, which in the higher ranks of Society springs from that inconsiderateness which is the effect of Luxury and Ambition, and is supported by a modish Philosophy, emulous of distinction in polite and fashionable circles. All this illusion, for such it is, would vanish as a dream before the lustre of the Prophetic Evidence: and the Prophecy now before us is so luminous, as to have dispelled this intellectual blindness in very many instances.

23 Rom. x. 16. John xii. 37–43.

v. 2. A principal cause of the incredulity of the Jews was the humble and suffering state of the Messiah.

For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant,
And as a root out of a dry ground:
most elegantly expressive of the humble birth of our Lord, descended indeed from the ancient root and royal stock of David, but obscured by usurpation, and excluded from worldly dignity. The Sacred Virgin had no other dowry than her sanctity of manners, her Faith and acquiescence: and she expressed the depression of her fortune not of her mind, (for she was too humble to speak of her humility) when she said,

He hath regarded the low estate of his hand-band-maiden. Yet, notwithstanding this depression in his external circumstances and appearance in the world, He grew up before God, under the immediate protection and favour of Divine Providence.

He hath no form nor comeliness,
And when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him:

The transition from the birth and youth of Christ, to his manly age and public character, refutes the vain expectation which the Jews had formed, that the Messiah would appear in the style of a King and a Conqueror: that his first enterprizes would be to vindicate their nation from the Herodian tyranny, and to assert their liberty from the Roman yoke; that thus he would restore the kingdom to Israel; and that his victories would terminate in an universal Empire. Heroes, such as the ancient world admired, appeared with elevation and majesty: a Roman triumph was the most factious exhibition of human glory. Christ was infinitely above all this parade of magnificence, pride, and conquest. He appeared familiarly among his people, without any external luftre, a plain poor man, exercised in a laborious mechanic art, and as humble in his manners as in his condition. He came in all the simplicity of a teacher of righteousness, with a mild and modest aspect, full of compassion, kindness, and philanthropy. The words before us, he hath no form nor comeliness,—no beauty that we should desire him, do not intimate any ungracefulness in the exterior or person of Christ, which was gracious and engaging, and I doubt not, as perfect as that of the First Adam in Paradise: and as a public Speaker he was adorned with the most powerful and persuasive Eloquence. But the Prophecy refers to his being destitute of external pomp and attendance, without any great or powerful men to make a party for him, without any arrogant pretensions of his own, and under obvious disadvantages from the place of his education and from his employment. We have proofs of this prejudice against him, in the Gospels: Whence hath this man this wisdom, and these mighty works; their malignity gave the most most certain testimony of both, while they detracted from the merit of the Great Teacher;

Is not this the Carpenter's son? Is not this the Carpenter, the son of Mary, the brother of James and Joses, and of Juda and Simon? And are not his sisters here with us:

And they were offended at him. And so would many of us be, if he appeared among us in the same lowly state, with the same connections: we should not consider him as a man of consequence and figure enough, to engage our attention. But this was but part of the reasons, why this Great Prophet was without honour in his own country.

The stumbling-block of the Jews was the Cross of Christ.

v. 3. He is despised and rejected of men,

A man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief.

A man of sorrows! — how memorably verified in many incidents of his life! above all, in the painful sufferings that closed it!

We hid as it were our faces from him:

He was despised, and we esteemed him not.

\[^{14}\text{Matth. xiii. 54, 55. Mark vi. 4.}\]

Even
DISCOURSE VII.

Even his bosom friends, his beloved disciples, all forsook him and fled; while the furious multitude uttered their impious indignities. This awful event is so described in all its circumstances in this and other prophecies, as to give the clearest Demonstration of the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God, and of the great end and purpose, for which he was delivered and taken, and by wicked hands was crucified and slain. The illustration of these topics will tend to shew the exact completion of this memorable prophecy; and to establish our Faith in the Cross of Christ, and our Love to him who Loved us and gave Himself for us.

v. 4. Surely he hath borne our griefs, And carried our sorrows.

The true reason of his sufferings is given in the first part of this verse; in opposition to the false and mistaken opinion of the pious Jews before their conversion,

Yet we did esteem him stricken, Smitten of God and afflicted.

15 Acts ii, 23.
He hath borne—he, the illustrious person here spoken of: not the nation or people at large, who in prosopopoeia is generally described as a female character, The daughter of Sion, the solitary City, in all that plaintive elegance which pervades the finest of Elegies, Jeremiah's Lamentations. The true rationale of Christ's sufferings is here expressed: Surely, is expressive of the certainty of so important a proposition: He hath borne our griefs. The Servant of God, holy and harmless, pure from fraud or crime, in all that ignominy, and sorrow, and pain, in all his bitter passion, patiently sustained a vicarious punishment, for the Sins of all Mankind: willingly substituting Himself instead of Sinners, to bear their iniquities, and sustain the punishment due to each and all of them. When God determined to save reformed sinners, it was not agreeable to the eternal laws of his moral government, to save them without a satisfaction to his Justice. Such a Satisfaction was indispensably necessary. Otherwise, the menaces of God against Sin would be of no avail, if he should wave his own pro-prohibition; and it would render our Disobedience an indifferent thing, and even a subject of Approbation and reward, if he should Save us in our own demerits. To avoid so impious and absurd a consequence, we must discern, that there is no other way to make our pardon reconcileable with the Divine Rectitude, than by an infinite Satisfaction. He therefore gave his Son, as a Mediator and a Sponsor, to assume the human nature; and in that nature to sustain the dire effects of our apostacy; anguish and agony of mind and body; pain and infamy and death; that by a just and rigid satisfaction, giving his own inestimable life for the forfeited lives of all the world, he might obtain eternal Redemption for all who Believe and Obey him. This is the Doctrine, which results from this Prophecy, and from many other passages of Scripture. We pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God: for he hath made him to be sin, or, a sin-offering, for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him 21.

21 2 Cor. v. 20, 21.
He bore our griefs, he carried our sorrows. He not only took them away, but took them on himself, a burden infinitely heavier than his cross.

St. Matthew applies this passage to Christ's healing the sick. He cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses. Which is only an elegant accommodation of the prophetic words, to the events then present; intimating that the fatigue, which Christ sustained in healing the sick and casting out evil spirits, was a fit emblem of his pain and passion in healing our spiritual diseases.

Yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted. The Jews in their unbelief, who beheld him, condemned by Pilate as a rebel to Cesar, by the High-Priest and Council as a deceiver and impostor, considered him as a state-criminal, like a leper \(^{25}\) secluded from society, and cut off by a judicial sentence. As the Psalmist foretold, They persecute him, whom Thou hast smitten \(^{26}\). But the Prophet clears their unjust aspersion, by assigning a circumstantial specification of the True Cause of Christ's sufferings:

\[\text{v. 5. But he was wounded for our transgressions,} \]

\[\text{He was bruised for our iniquities:} \]

\[\text{The chastisement of our peace was upon Him;} \]

\[\text{And with His stripes we are healed.} \]

Christ is represented to us as on his Cross. He was wounded, or pierced \(^{27}\) with the nails and spear, as it was foretold by the Psalmist \(^{28}\): They pierced my hands and my feet. The twenty-second Psalm is an hyperbolic exaggeration of grief, if applied to any other subject: but agrees in all its emphasis to the passion of Christ, who decided its prophetic sense, by repeating, probably, the whole Psalm on the Cross, as the consolation of his sufferings, in their end and purpose expressed by \[\text{\text{v. 6. But He was wounded for our transgressions,} } \]

\[\text{He was bruised for our iniquities:} \]

\[\text{The chastisement of our peace was upon Him;} \]

\[\text{And with His stripes we are healed.} \]

\[\text{B 2} \]

\[\text{Bochart, hieroz. I. iii. 6.} \]

\[\text{xxii. 16.} \]

\[\text{lxix. 26.} \]

\[\text{xxli, 16.} \]

\[\text{Bochart. hieroz. I. iii. 6.} \]

\[\text{the} \]
the transition to the glories of his kingdom. It is a description of a Roman punishment, inflicted by Roman soldiers, who did not understand even the language of the prophecy. All the usages, at our Saviour's trial and passion were so completely Roman, that they must have been inconceivable in the age of David, otherwise than by the spirit of prophecy. The same Spirit dictated those plaintive and triumphant strains of the lxixth Psalm, which are so descriptive of a suffering yet glorious Redeemer.

_I will pour upon the house of David and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon Me whom they have pierced_\(^30\), which was literally fulfilled at the crucifixion \(^31\) and spiritually, when their Country was desolated by the Romans, and whenever the Jewish people shall feel and lament the guilt of their ancestors \(^32\).

_In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David and to the inhabitants of_\(^{40}\) Zech. xii. 10. \(^31\) John xix. 37. \(^32\) Rev. i. 7.

_30_ Zech. xii. 10. _31_ John xix. 37. _32_ Rev. i. 7._
Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness. By an allusion to the ablutions of the Law, is prefigured the expiation by the blood of Christ. The Christian æra is elegantly characterized by the abolition of idolatry, and of false prophecy: and one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends. Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, my equal, faith the Lord of hosts: smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered: and I will turn mine hand upon the little ones: I will protect the little flock of his true disciples.

This prophet with admirable precision has specified the very sum for which the Traitor betrayed him. And I said, if ye think good give me my price, and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver. And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price, that I was prised at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord. To discern the cogency of this prediction, it would appear to have a close connection with the subject of the xith, xiith, and xiiith Chapters of Zechariah, which predict the Jewish War and the destruction of the Temple: 39 Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars 35.

33 Zech. xiii.7. יק percubitam, ποικλημαν. הערת Kennic. diff. gen. §. 44. ex vers. Arab.

He was bruised for our iniquities. As the former clause refers to his bodily pains, this respects the anguish and agony of his mind; so pathetically related in the gospels. My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death 36. O my Father, if it be possible, let this Cup pass from me.—If this cup may not pass away from me, except I drink it, thy will be done 37. Christ in his agony prays to the Father, that he would exempt him from the disgrace, the pains and malediction of the Cross, if it were possible to save sinners, without thus dying for them. But the eternal Father, ever well pleased in

in his Beloved Son, and who ever heard his prayers, did not grant his ardent request, when thus agonizing under the sense of the greatest and most tremendous sacrifice, that Love divine could offer, when it offered itself to save Sinners, who could not be saved without it. His prayer could not be granted: God did not grant him the exemption he prayed for: because it was not possible to save sinners, otherwise than by the Satisfaction of his death.

His agony is also inconsistent with his suffering, merely as a Martyr to divine Truth. His own Martyrs of every age, and even of the weaker sex, encountered death in all its terrors with surprising constancy and magnanimity: and the Captain of our salvation would have sustained his own death, without perturbation or agony of mind, had not that agony, from a deep sense of human guilt, been essential to its Expiation.

The chastisement of our peace was upon him. His punishment was not only vicarious, but 42 John xi. 42.

DISCOURSE VII.

conspicuous and exemplary, that all might see their own deserts in his sufferings; that the impenitent and the faithless may see the wrath which abideth on them; and that reformed believers may be ever grateful for the sentence they have escaped, by his being set forth a propitiation for them.

By his stripes we are healed. This sets before us that most painful and ignominious circumstance of the passion, the scourging of Jesus. The plowers plowed upon my back, and made long furrows. And in another prophecy, The Divine Teacher expresses his patient and magnanimous suffering those disgraces, which human heroism never could support.

When our blessed Saviour predicts his own passion, he considers his scourging as the first ingredient in that bitter cup. May we derive from his stripes that healing which his Apostle suggests! Christ suffered for us, leaving us an example—who his ownself bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins should live unto righteousness; by whose stripes ye were healed.

Psal. cxxix. 3.

The constancy of Christ in bearing his Cross, despising the shame, transcends the magnanimity of those heroes who devoted their lives in battle, or otherwise. There was a brilliance and glory in the one which made death itself honourable: but in the death of the Cross there was no alleviation, but every thing to aggravate the suffering. Thus, besides that general Rectitude which is essential to all the divine proceedings, the death of Christ was divested of that great and constant exception to human heroism, false-glory.

The chastisement of our peace was open and exemplary. He was set forth as a propitiation: and himself illustrated this intent of his sufferings by the type of the brazen serpent. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up. He expresses the necessity of his crucifixion, as an exemplary punishment; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. We therefore should have perished, if he had not been thus lifted up. And the admirable effects of his passion are expressed by the like allusion. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die.

v. 6. All we like sheep have gone astray:
 We have turned every one to his own way:
 And the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

In this sense he is the Saviour. For otherwise, none of us, without him could be saved. 'We are all sinners, and gone out of the way of God's laws; every one to his own way, or natural propensity; and as such, are unable by any deed or suffering of 47 John iii. 14, 15. 48 xii. 32, 33.

---

ours to claim or deserve God's pardon. And therefore God laid on him the punishment of the sins of the whole world, who having never offended was the fittest to propitiate his just displeasure 49.

49 Bishop Chandler's Def. p. 151.

x. 7. He was oppressed, and he was afflicted,
Yet he opened not his mouth:
He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter,
And as a sheep before her shearers is dumb,
So he openeth not his mouth.

He was oppressed: literally, the debt was exacted 50 of him. He was afflicted, he answered 51 for our debt. In the prophetic Psalm: I restored that which I took not away: I paid them the things that I never took 52. God insifted on a penalty, for maintaining the honour of his Laws and Government, which would otherwise be impaired by our universal defection. Christ paid the satisfaction for insolvent sinners. The manner of the satisfaction, was by offering himself a voluntary and submissive sacrifice for sin.

50 It was exacted, and he was made answerable. Bp. Lowth.
51 lxix. 3.

We
We are debtors to God. We owe him our whole duty. We have detained from him that which is his right, and we should infinitely yet truly aggravate the charge, if we considered, that besides defrauding him of our duty, as our first fathers hath sinned, we too have wearied him with our iniquities. God's right to our debt of Obedience cannot be repaired but by Restitution. Sinners have neither the will nor the power to make reparation. The sinner, even supposing him to be truly penitent, cannot satisfy for his past enormities. His whole duty is due: the greatest part is withheld: nor can the Repentance and Virtues of the best ever equal their delinquency, much less make amends for it.

Restitution, full and equivalent, from whomsoever, is payment and acquittance. If a Responsible Benefactor substitutes himself in the debtor's place, Substitution satisfies, especially if expressly stipulated. Christ, at once divine and human, has all the requisite qualities of a surety, to satisfy so immense a debt. Assuming humanity, he took on himself that nature in which we have offended. In this capacity, he is our proper pledge and surety: he is of our flesh and blood: of our kin and family: and, as such, has the right, the will, and the power to redeem us 54.

Isai. xliii. 24—27.

The silence of Jesus, except in that good confession, I am the Son of God, is noted by all the Evangelists; from whom we may collect, that his silence respected the accusations laid against him, which were evidently false. On other topics, our Lord replied, briefly and prudently. Isaiah repeats the clause, he opened not his mouth, perhaps to intimate his silence before both the tribunals, of Pilate, and of the High-priest.

As a Lamb, the purest of the legal victims, innocent and unresisting, he was led a meek and resigned sacrifice. He was led to the slaughter 55, to the effusion of his

---

54 See Hebr. ii, throughout. 55 ושת לټيپث blood, blood, and a violent death. The process of which is set before us in the two next verses.
DISCOURSE VII.

\[ \text{y. 8. He was taken from prison and from judgment:} \]

His life was taken away, by form of Law and a session of Judges. In his trial and sentence, all the forms of the Roman Law were observed: but it was form only; for his sentence was pronounced, against the conscience and conviction of his Judge.

The expression, be was taken, is used of Enoch and of Elijah being taken up to heaven. and might here be translated, be was taken up, as St. Luke's phrase is, into glory. In his humiliation his judgment was taken away; his capital sentence was reversed and effaced: his innocence was vindicated by his resurrection and ascension.

56 הָנְבֵּא 57 Gen. v. 24. 2 Kings ii. 1—3. Psal. xlix. 15.
58 Acts i. 2. 59 1 Tim. iii. 16. Acts viii. 33.

And
DISCOURSE VII.

And who shall declare his generation?
Who that beheld this man of sorrows would have imagined, that he was lineally descend from the royal house of David? much less, that he was, in a diviner sense, the only Son of God 60; and who declared of himself, I am the first and the last, I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore 61. For he was cut off 62 out of the land of the living: by a judicial sentence, as was predicted to Daniel; Messiah shall be cut off.

For the transgression of my people was he stricken 63.

The capital doctrine of Christ's vicarious sufferings is emphatically repeated, in new and varied expression; which at once afferts the innocence of Christ, and the satisfaction of his death.

x. 9. He made his grave with the wicked,
And with the rich in his death:

60 Justin. dialog. §. 76. oudeis xar, avthwtois ou 62 anwqeiav, avankivnoiv 1hexi to xeiw 61 Rev. i. 18.
62 בַּנִּוֹן
63 לְמָו or or, by an easy trajectory,

"He gave him to be with the wicked in his death,
"And with the rich in his burial *.

God for the wisest reasons gave his Beloved Son, to die with the wicked, to be crucified between two malefactors: yet vindicated his spotless innocence by an honourable burial in the sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea, a rich man, who also himself was Jesus' disciple 64; who laid the sacred body in his own new tomb: a circumstance, which providentially ascertained the proofs of his resurrection; and was a becoming and respectful tribute to his Merits:

because he had done no violence, no act of sedition against the State, neither was there any deceit in his mouth, any error or falsehood in his Doctrine.

His perfect innocence was essential to his Sacrifice. For such an high-priest became us; holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and higher than the heavens: who needeth not daily,

 Matth. xxvii. 57.

Clericus.
daily, as those high priests, to offer up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people's: for this he did once, when he offered up himself

§. 10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; He hath put him to grief.

In the fifth verse,

he was bruised for our iniquities,
he was wounded for our transgressions.

Both express the same idea in the same words, which distinctly mark the pains of his body, and the anguish of his mind. The scope of the sequel of this prophecy is, to represent Christ's passion, as originating from the good pleasure of God, and terminating in His glory: who rewarded those temporary though inexpressible sufferings, with a glorious Resurrection, an eternal Life, and a kingly Jurisdiction over a redeemed world, both in earth and in heaven. For these purposes, too great for our most enlarged ideas, it pleased the 65 Hebr. vii. 26, 27.

66 Lord
67 Lord
Lord to bruise him, to put him to grief. The word ⁷⁰ is used sacrificially. Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt-offering, and holocaust; then shalt they offer bullocks upon thine altar ⁷¹. The sacrifice atones God to the sinner; his displeasure is removed; his favour is conciliated; and in this view, the Apostle, who perfectly knew the significance of the Jewish ritual, teaches us to walk in Love, as Christ also loved us, and gave himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savour ⁷², most acceptable to the Father of the universe. The sacrifice of Christ's death was the true and only mean, by which, consistently with his own perfections, He could forgive our sins, unite us to himself, and admit us, unworthy as we are, to participate of his nature and happiness. This indispensible condition of our acceptance with God is expressed as follows:

If ⁷³ his soul shall make an offering ⁷⁴ for sin.

⁷⁰ פְּרֵחִי ⁷¹ Psalm li. 19. comp. Psalm xl. 7. ⁷² Ephes. v. 2. ⁷³ חֵל ⁷⁴ נָשָׁה The
The corrected translation, intimates that Christ's offering himself for sin was perfectly voluntary: as in the often-cited xlvth Psalm, v. 7, 8. Then said I, lo I come: —I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart: than which, no words can more aptly express the alacrity and willingness of Christ to save the world by his cross.

We now have the happiness, under the guidance of Inspiration, to make a transition from the sufferings of Christ, to the glory that should follow; both testified so long beforehand, that our Faith may be found unto praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ. 75

The reward of his divine philanthropy, in offering himself a sacrifice for our sins, is specified in three particulars: 1. he shall see his seed; an offspring of true believers, willing in the day of his power. Among his votaries shall be the Great and the Strong, kings and princes, with their subject nations, as is expressed with so much animation in the Livth Chapter. 2. He shall prolong his days; his life shall be restored, and continued through the eternity of a celestial empire. 3. And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; the kingdom of God shall be administered by his exalted Son, by a perfect union of the divine counsels; till, by various degrees of progressive excellence, the Christian Church shall be advanced on earth to its utmost perfection, unity and universality; and be then transferred to heaven.

75 1 Pet. i. 7—12.

v. 11. He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied.

The prodigious exertions of the fortitude and philanthropy of Christ shall not be fruitless either to the divine Victim or to His redeemed. What recompence awaited Him, we may learn from another Prophecy 76:

Therefore my heart is glad, and my glory rejoiceth:
My flesh also shall rest in hope.

76 Psalm xvi. 9, 10, 11.
DISCOURSE VII.

For thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, or in the state of death,
Neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption.
Thou wilt shew me the path of life:
In thy presence is fulness of joy,
And at thy right hand are pleasures for evermore.

Because 77 of the travail and agony of his soul, He shall see the Face of God in perfect endless felicity and glory, as it is expressed 78,

I will bebold thy face in righteousness:
I shall be satisfied, when I awake with thy likeness.

This is the first and personal fruit of Christ's passion; His Resurrection, and the reception of his human nature into the glories of heaven: to animate the faith, the patience, and the hopes, of all his true disciples, that, if we suffer with him, we may be also glorified together with him 79.

By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many:

77 פַּלְמַיָּה לְעָבֹל
78 פַּלְמַיָּה כְּחָלִית
79 רומ ע' א' י'
My Righteous Servant shall justify many, by their knowledge of Him. He is styled Righteous, because nothing short of perfect Rectitude can satisfy for the sins of many, that is, of all mankind. His personal Rectitude united to his Sacrifice obtains for reformed Sinners the high privilege of being accepted as if they were Righteous. He shall justify Many—If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, And He is the propitiation for our sins, and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. The immense benefit is universal: but, with respect to individuals, wherever Christ is publickly known or preached, it is to be obtained only by the personal Knowledge of Him. For God is just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. In the style of Scripture, Knowledge includes Affection. To know God is to love God. To know Christ, is to be convinced that His merit, His passion, His obedience, is the sole cause of our pardon and salvation: to know Christ, is to acknowledge this divine mercy and grace, with heart-felt gratitude; to accept it with an humble mind, disclaiming self-dependence; and to devote ourselves to Christ, as our Saviour and our Soverain, with intense love and unreserved subjection. Such knowledge, founded in reason and completed in faith, is a practical conformity to Christ, because of our immense obligations to him: that we may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death.

30 1 John ii. 1, 2.
81 Rom. iii. 26.

For he shall bear their iniquities:

The prophecy reverts to the primary Cause of all the benefits obtained for man, Christ's satisfaction. But the expression is here so decided, as to leave no room for any doubt, that Christ not only took away or cancelled our sins, but that he bore our iniquities by substituting himself in the place of sinners. The punishment of our sins was laid on him, as a heavy burden; our expiation and sanctification could not be effected, without the direct sufferings on the part of Christ: who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins should live unto righteousness.

Phil. iii. 10.
DISCOURSE VII.

That we may leave no part of this admirable prophecy without some illustration, let us consider the true import of the concluding verse:

v. 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great,
And he shall divide the spoil with the strong:

In the first verse the Great should be translated the Many, as he had justified Many, so Many Nations should become his willing subjects in the day of his power. I will divide to him innumerable captives, the portion of his victory. The next clause also requires an emendation: he shall divide the strong for a spoil. As the Many refer to the universal kingdom of Christ on earth; so the Strong have a particular aspect on

---

34 1 Pet. ii. 24. 85 רנים "תאולא" the the Roman empire, subsisting in its full force when Christ suffered. From this idolatrous empire he rescued immense multitudes, enslaved to Vice and Superstition, whom he delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

The conclusion reverts to a new specification of the meritorious cause of such infinite benefits to mankind:

Because he hath poured out his soul unto death.

The expression of pouring out the soul or life is transferred from the shedding the blood of the victims offered in sacrifice, till they expired. Applied to Christ, it denotes the readiness and completeness of his Sacrifice. He willingly suffered his blood to be shed, and his life exhausted, in the cause of sinful humanity. To save his brethren, he devoted himself to a voluntary death: and, as a victim, the effusion of his blood by his agony, by his stripes, by his crown of thorns, and by the Soldier's spear, was essential to the design of Providence. For our sakes he was prodigal of his own life; he poured out his soul unto death by a spontaneous sacrifice: as he himself expressed it; Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself.

\[86 \text{Rom. viii. 21.}\]

And he was numbered with the transgressors: with the worst of sinners; He was with the wicked in his death: an indignity, which peculiarly affected his greatness of mind, when he was apprehended: In that same hour, said Jesus to the multitudes, are ye come out as against a thief with swords and staves for to take me? I sat daily with you teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me. But, as the Evangelist observes, all this was done, that the scriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled. His enemies denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto them, and killed the Prince of Life. He was crucified between Two malefactors, the fit representatives 86 John x. 17, 18.

---

87 Matth. xxvi. 55, 56.
88 Acts iii. 14, 15.
tatives of all mankind; for all may be claffed with one or other of them. The obdurate and impenitent reviles the suffering Saviour, and both, for a time, aggravate the pains and disgrace and sorrows of his Cross. But when the human heart is touched as it ought to be with this sad spectacle; self-condemned, it breaks forth into that reasonable expostulation:

_Dost not thou fear God, seeing thou art in the same condemnation? And we indeed justly; for we receive the due reward of our deeds: but this man hath done nothing amiss._

_And he bare the sin of many:_

In the legal sacrifices, the offerer placed both his hands on the head of the victim, and confessed his sin: by this rite, transferring his guilt to his sacrifice. Christ is here characterized as the Lamb of God, _which taketh away_, or, beareth, _the sin of the world_. The paschal Lamb was a propitiatory sacrifice, by whose blood the Israelites were expiated: and, on account of the typical resemblance, they feafted on that 69 John i. 29. 36.

---

DISCOURSE VII.

We Christians are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: and in memory of our Redemption, we feast on Christ's sacrifice in the Eucharist, and shew forth his death till he come.

And he made intercession for the transgressors: not only in that particular but transcendent instance of his divine heroism, in praying for his crucifiers; Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do; a prayer of that efficacy, as to have been followed by the conversion of all the penitent and virtuous Jews, who thus were rescued from the ruin of their devoted Country. His intercession is of that infinite efficacy, that All our sins done in a state of ignorance and unbelief, and even all our sins of which we truly and timely Repent, and from which we are actually Reformed, are pardoned on the sole account of Christ's sacrifice and intercession. For all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; being justified freely by his grace.
grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood.

II.

The Argument for the Divine Original and Authority of the Gospel of Christ, from the minute and exact completion of this Prophecy in his person, is of that force, as to combine all the properties of a complete Moral Demonstration. An inspired Mind alone could have formed the idea, of a Divine Person, whom we have seen expressly styled the Mighty God, and who Himself, gracious and unassuming as he was, thought it no robbery or usurpation to be equal with God, who yet made himself of no reputation,—and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the Cross.

Nothing but Inspiration could have combined so discordant ideas, as concur in the divine and human character of Christ.

92 Rom. iii. 93 Phil. ii. 1—11.
DISCOURSE VII.

Isaiah, whose natural genius led him to delight in the sublime and the magnificent, combines them with mournful and pathetic images, whenever he is speaking of the great subject of his prophecies: especially in this prediction of the various incidents of the passion of Christ, which so attend our hearts, that we scarce can read them, without the tribute of our tears. It is observable, that none of the Prophets dwell so much, on the sufferings of Christ, as David and Isaiah, the one a victorious King, the other a favoured Courtier: circumstances, which preclude any application of these descriptions of agony and death, and a vicarious voluntary sacrifice, to themselves or any other, than to the victim of the universe, who always thus applied them. Behold, we go up to Jerusalem, and all things that are written by the prophets concerning the son of man shall be accomplished.

When God determined to Reform and Save sinners, it was not agreeable to the 94 Luke xviii. 31—34.

eternal eternal Laws of his moral government, to fave them without a Satisfaftion to his Justice. Not that we are to imagine the Deity inexorable, or that His Clemency ever rejects a true Penitent: but for Rea- sons of Divine Government, by which the Guilty cannot be admitted to His Presence without an Expiation. All analogies must fail us on fuch a subject; but Criminals cannot be pardoned generally and gratui- tously under any government divine or human. Otherwise the Moral World would be thrown into Confufion. It is also an evident Law of the Divine Govern- ment, and Revelation as well as Reason confirms it, that Obedience to the Deity must be voluntary. Justice can coerce and punish for the past, and Mercy can forgive: but no man is compelled to Vice or Virtue. So that the great expedient of One General Expiation seems alone worthy of the Divine wisdom, as being the moft persuasive application to the ingenuousness of human nature, fitteft to affect our Gratitude and Love, and consequent Obedience.

With
With respect to the kind and mode of Expiation which God was pleased to appoint and accept, it was the Sacrifice of Christ a Most Piacular victim.

God having threatened death to Adam, all men, as they have followed him in his revolt, became obnoxious to just punishment. Nothing but a gracious pardon on the part of God could retrieve mankind from destruction. But a pardon, without a satisfaction, would have been inconsistent with the interests of Virtue, or, which is equivalent, with the honour of the divine attributes. Vice and Virtue would become indifferent, if the divine favour could be extended to both alike. But it is impossible, that God should make sin indifferent, much less an object of approbation or reward. To avoid so impious a consequence, there is no other way to make our forgiveness and salvation consistent with all the divine attributes, than by a perfect Satisfaction for the sins of the whole world.

God, of his own goodness, offered a free and general pardon, in consideration of the sacrifice of His Son: who, in our own nature, with the most generous philanthropy, and voluntary submission to the divine will, for the joy that was set before him of being the Saviour of the world, with perfect meekness, charity, and resignation, made his soul an offering for sin, by sustaining all the cruel indignities of the worst capital punishment, which wicked Rulers and a violent Multitude could inflict.
DISCOURSE VII.

The meritorious obedience and all-accomplished character of Christ, on his own account entitled him to an exemption from every adversity. So that we must look for some other cause of his inexpressible sufferings; which can be no other, than that which is so often resumed and repeated in this prophecy. "He shall sprinkle many nations: he is despised and rejected of men: surely, he hath borne our grieves: he was wounded for our transgressions: the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all: for the transgression of my people was he stricken: God made his soul an offering for sin: his righteous servant
vii. \[50\]

"vant justified many, by bearing their ini-"quities: he poured out his soul unto "death: and he bare the sin of many." This frequent repetition of the reason of the death of Christ is undoubtedly intended by the Holy Spirit, in order to impress it indelibly on our hearts: because no Truth, no Doctrine, is so essential to our safety and happiness, as the Cross of Christ. Without this Redemption, we are yet in our sins, without pardon, without hope: but when our all is at stake, it is necessary that we should have abundant assurance of God's gracious purpose towards us; that we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope set before us.\[95\]

This memorable prophecy of our Saviour's Passion is one of the clearest and strongest demonstrations of the Authority of His Doctrine and the Satisfaction of His Death: it being impossible, that so many singular circumstances should be predicted and minutely verified, otherwise than by a Divine Inspiration. So that it is incumbent on every one who reads this Prophecy, to act as that honest and prudent person did, whose conversion is related in the Acts of the Apostles. The place of the Scripture which he read was this, "He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so he opened not his mouth: in his humiliation his judgment was taken away: and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth." And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

\[95\] Hebr. vi. 18.

With all his beneficence and unwearied exertions in doing good, with all the splendour of his miracles, and excellence of his life and doctrine: the sufferings of Christ in the artless recital of the Evangelists exceed the most pathetic story, real or invented. The detail of his crucifixion, when accurately scrutinized, affects us with terror as well as compassion. Voluntary sufferings are never encountered but for some great purpose; and it was easy and obvious for Christ to decline them. Nor was He of that melancholy and gloomy temperament, which familiarizes painful ideas and disposes the mind to verify them in real sufferings. Christ's temper and conduct, throughout the Gospel, is cheerful and social, full of active kindness and humanity. His Cross is inexplicable, on any other idea, than of a voluntary and expiatory Satisfaction: and, though we should not be able to solve all the difficulties that must attend our unequal ideas of the divine counsels; Christ's Passion is irreconcilable with God's love of perfect Virtue, if considered without its connection with the Redemption of the world. There is no way of accounting for his tremendous death, consistent with his perfect Innocence, otherwise than as a Satisfaction. Otherwise, God by permitting his sufferings would have made perfect Virtue most unhappy. But his Innocence was essential to his Sacrifice: and his dying as a victim, for the sins of others, is consistent with with all the divine attributes, and perhaps is the only mean, by which they can completely harmonize.

Take away the voluntary and temporary relation which Christ bore to the sins of the world, and there can be no motive in God to abandon so perfect sanctity even for a moment to so extreme misery, pain, disgrace, and malediction. His death therefore was a penalty by substitution: expiatory of Man's sin; propitiatory of God's justice; in order to make a world of Sinners capable of his clemency.

The wages of sin is death ⁹⁷, spiritual and eternal death: for this is the death, from which Christ redeems us; not from natural death, which passes on all men. If God forbears to punish sin in this life, it is because Christ has merited this forbearance for sinners, and has rendered God so placable, that he waits for and invites their repentance. Even still more admirable are the effects of Christ's satisfaction: for God under the covenant of Grace does not pu-nigh men merely as sinners (otherwise, Religion and Happiness would be extinct) but as obstinate and irreclaimable sinners; whom he reluctantly gives up because of their faithless and final impenitence.

⁹⁷ Rom. vi. 23,

In the state of innocence, we contemplate God as a Creator; in the state of guilt, we view Him as a Redeemer. In the first state, remunerative or vindictive Justice is the rule of the divine administration: in the second state, Mercy ever placable, if the sinner will accept it through Him who procured it. Under the dispensation of Nature, God threatens and punishes sin as an offended Creator; under the Gospel, He threatens and punishes as a rejected Redeemer, with much forer punishment. So that the Sinner has no other alternative, but either to sustain eternal punishment, or to have recourse to Christ's Satisfaction in its full extent. We may apply to this interesting subject, that affecting passage of Moses: See, I have set before thee this day Life and Good, and Death and Evil: I have set before you Life and Death; therefore, CHOOSE LIFE.

56 Hebr. x. 29. 59 Deut. xxx. 15, 19.
To interpret such a Prophecy would be of little use, compared with the salutary Lessons which it teaches. The most obvious and important of these Lessons is expressed by Him who taught them by His own Experience. And be said to them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me. We must take up our daily Cross, whether we will, or not. It lays heavy on the bulk of mankind, in their poverty, their labours, and adversities. It lays heavy on the Rich and Great, in their employments, interruptions, secret sufferings, and cumbrous dignities. All should bear their Cross, in the spirit of Religion; and by denying themselves, the worse and brutal part of themselves, should learn to follow Christ. The whole force of Christianity is centered in that heroic assertion of St. Paul: 'I am crucified with Christ: nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life, which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me'. The practical result of this great and solemn Sacrifice, is our moral and religious conformity to the death of Christ, by bearing his and our Cross, and crucifying our sinful affections.

100 Luke ix. 23.

The divine victim addresses himself to us by all his sufferings in our behalf, by the tenderness and ardour of his love; by all the considerations of duty and gratitude, of our personal safety and happiness; by his agony and cross, his merits and his death; not to dishonour by vice or unbelief that worthy name, by which we are called: but to follow his great example; to take upon ourselves with constancy and zeal the easy yoke and light burden of the meek and lowly Jesus; that we may find rest to our souls; to present Him our bodies a living sacrifice; to be renewed in the spirit of our minds; to be adorned with the beauties of holiness; to love our Lord Jesus in sincerity, and to shew forth the praises of Him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light.

PROOFS
PROOFS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

PAGE 3.

VITRINGA, II. p. 558. Ordior μὴ θεον θεον Librum præstantissimi Prophetæ Quintum, secundum partitionem initio operis factam. Est, ut cætera omnia, argumeti gravis et sublimis; et, si comparatio locum habeat in partibus Operis Divini, pondere rerum et ευεργεία dictiorum ubique eximii: meritò Dixeris, estimam hanc Libri partem, excellentia materiæ et figurarum orationis scitissimè fictarum varietate, cæteris præstat. — Describit potissimum Personam Messiæ, Regnum ejus fundandum inter Gentes, cum repudio majoris partis populi Judæi rebellis et immorigeri Evangelio; Fata illius Regni, et in his corruptionem in ipso Messiæ populo emersuram cum tyrannide, et Ecclesiæ oppressæ ac humana ope destitutæ vindicias, terminandas in glorioso illius statu; ad quem depingendum Vates aliquotiens telà à principio retextæ recurrat.

PAGE 8.

fione fanguinis sacrificiorum frequenter usurpatur, Lev. viii. 11. 30. quod merito h. l. ut typus cum veritate confertur. Dei juftitia, inquit Bochartus, iis folis parcit, quorum conscientiae Christi fanguine adfperfæ sunt. Quippe ut agni paschalis, ita et Christi fanguis, non alia de caufa effusus est, quam ut adfpergeretur, et aspersione sua nos e morte eximeret et liberraret. Hierozoic. i. p. 615.

Cap. liii. 1. Spatium præmittunt MSS. 1. 10, 11, &c.

I.XX. 2. άνγγελαμέν, in the plural, though it is scarce intelligible, seems to have suggested the idea of the national sense, which the ancient and modern Jews obtrude on this prophecy. Origen mentions and refutes this false interpretation: c. Cels. lib. i. p. 42. Μεμνημαὶ ωδε, εν τινι ωργι τους λεγομενους χαρα Ιουδαιοις σοφους εκζητειτε, τας προφητειας ταυτας χρησαμενος. εφ' οίς ελεγεν ο Ιουδαιος, ταυτα επεροφησενθαι ως χερι ενος του ολου λαου, και γενομενου εν τη διαστορα, και πιναιγειτος, ινα πολλοι προσηλυτοι γενωλαι, τη προφασει του επεσπαρθαι Ιουδαιους τοις πολλοις ενεσι.—Πολλα μεν

ΟΥΝ

P. 18. Querit an infinitus servare non possit absque λύπης. Respondéo, quicquid fit de potentia et jure divino, voluntati ejus, quam Exod. xxxiv. 7. Nahum i. 3. ac alibi expressit, satisfieri debuisse.

P. 56. Prophetiam de populo Israelis, vel Josiä rege, accipit contendit: in praecedentibus inquit et sequentibus, de populo Israelis agitur, ergò et hoc capite. R. Nonne c. xi. Exai. prima parte de Messia agitur, cum in praecedentibus, c. x. et sequentibus, c. xi. y. 11. sq. de populi liberatione sermo fit? Immo, de Messia in proximè præcedentibus (c. 52. 7. sq.) ac sequentibus agi aslero: quod tamen absque Populi mentione fieri nequit; utpote qui per ipsum liberandus dicatur.

LIII. 1. p. 76. Desultoriam levitatem observavate. 1. Nescit an de Josia, an vero de Populo Israelis caput exponendum fit.
60 DISCOURSE VII.

v. 3. Contemptus.] O homines vafros! Benjamin in itinerario Israelitarum potentiam mirè effert.—at nofter aliam insiistit viam: Israelitas præ omnibus aliis hominibus contemni.

v. 12. p. 149. Luce meridiana clarius est, hæc postrema hujus cap. 53. ad Israelitas non pertinere; utpote qui Nos odio habeant, et adversus nos preces concipiant.

P. 152. Quum priorem expositionem multis incommodis premi animadverteret Abrabaniel, aliam sinxit, qua Josiæ omnia assignaret. This interpretation is contradictory to his former opinion, that a man in the prophecy did not denote an individual, but the Nation at large. Both his expostitions are wretched sophistry, but the last is worse than the former.

PAGE 18.

EUSEBIUS, H. E. x. 4. Γνωρὴ τῆς ἡσάρκης φιλανθρωπίας, των εν φθορᾷ καὶ του κείμενου ἡμας εν μαλα τρομηματὶ υποδει την φυσιν, οία της Ἰατρῶν αριστος.

Της των καρυλων εἶνεκεν σωφρίας,

'Ορα τα δεινα, θηγγανει τα' ανδεων,

Ἀλλορίας τε συμφοραίιν ἱδιας

Καπτοῦναι λυπας.——

ου νοσουτάς αυτο μονον, ουδ' ἐλκεσι δεινος και σεσποσιν ὑδ' τραυμασι θρισομενους, αλλα και εν νεκροις κειμενους ἡμας, εξ αυτων μυχων του Σαβατου αυτος ἐαυτω λεονταλο.

PAGE
Of the Three Decii, Cicero, Tusc. i. 37. Si mors timeretur, — non cum Latinis decertans pater Decius, (A. U. 413.) cum Etruscis filius, (A. 458.) cum Pyrrho nepos (A. 474.) se hostium telis objecissent. See de Finib. ii. 19. and N. D. iii. 6. Tu autem etiam Deciorum devotionibus placatos Deos esse censes. Quæ fuit eorum tanta iniquitas, ut placari populo Romano non possent, nisi viri tales occidissent? consilium illud imperatorium fuit, quod Græci spalagymne appellant.—In this passage Tully rightly judges, that the devotements of the Decii were stratagem; but accurately expresses the religious idea annexed to them: as Juvenal does in these well-known verses. Sat. viii. 254. (apud Grot. de Satisf. p. 204.)

May we not suppose, that the Christian Religion was the more readily received in the world, because it was founded on an idea so popular and universal, as that of Expiation by the noblest of all Sacrifices, the self-devotion of a most a most exalted and virtuous character? It was an instance that, when enforced by the first preachers of Christianity, revived in the minds of the Romans the examples of ancient heroism recorded in their annals. This indeed is but a subsidiary argument, on which Archbishop Tillotson somewhere lays too much stress, when he supposes the whole Mediation of Christ to have been planned in accommodation to the prejudices of Mankind. The primary reason of Christ's sacrifice is the Necessity or divine expediency of a perfect satisfaction for the sins of the world; but the heroism of the devotion was agreeable to the universal ideas of greatness of Mind, in voluntary personal suffering for the general Good.

Origen considers the death of Christ, as analogous to that of heroes devoting themselves for their Countries. Ἀρεὶ γὰρ ὅσι ἐγών οἱ τὸν Ἰησοῦν μαθηταὶ, τολμοῦσι, οὐ μονον Ἰουδαῖοι εἰκ τῶν προφητικῶν λογικων παρισαιων, ὅτι οὗτος ειν ὁ προφητευεῖς, ἀλλα καὶ τοις λοιποῖς εἰθείσιν, ὅτι ὁ λαὸς καὶ πρωνγαυρωθεῖς, ἐκὼν τούτων τοῦ Θανάλου ὑπὲρ τοῦ τῶν ανθρώπων γενους ανεδεξάλο, ἀναλογον τοις αποθανούσιν ὑπὲρ ἔλεησιν, κ. τ. λ. His learned Commentator W. Spencer gives many instances, in his Note on lib. i. p. 25. c. Ccst. And St. Paul seems to countenance the same idea in the passage already cited, p. 271. from Romans v. 7. where he he represents it as the highest pitch of human heroism to die for a good and worthy Object. To die for the unworthy * is above humanity. It was divine in Christ, while we were enemies, to reconcile us to God by his own death. See John xv. 13.

St. Paul himself had this heroic idea of devoting himself for his country, when he was willing αναθεμα ειναι απο του Χρισου υπερ των αδελφων. Rom. ix. 3. which does not imply a willingness to forfeit his immortal hopes, but only his present privileges civil and religious, to save his country.

We have a noble expression of the like magnanimity in Moses; when he offered his own life, as Mediator between God and his People. God refused the devotement of Moses, declaring his acceptance of an infinite Redemption. Exod. xxxii. 32. Yet now, if thou wilt, forgive their sin: and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written, i.e. out of the church of Israel, by taking my life for theirs. And the Lord said,—mine angel shall go before thee, lest I consume thee in the way, as is expressed xxxiii. 3.

* γ. 7. μοις γας υπερ ΔΙΚΑΙΟΥ τις αποθανεν. ΔΙΚΟΥ DISCOURSE VII.

PAGE 20.

Cafaubon. in Baron. p. 546. En igitur clavos! en manus et pedes! quæ sunt propria, immo śāmāla, cruci Romanae. Fateor. sed addo, Spiritu prophetico prædici hæc a regio vate, in eo psalmo, quo fere historico stylo, passio Christi descriptur; non ex usu judiciorum fui temporis.

PAGE 23.

De nullo martyre, etiam fœminini et imbecillioris generis, ullum extat indicium, quod e sensu tormentorum, et præ metu mortis corporalis, sudorem fanguineum emiserit, et adeo fuerit contristatus, ut de Dei desertione fit conquestus. Langius. Gloria Christi. 11. 361.

PAGE 25.

Should it be objected, that the idea of a self-devotion, as illustrated by Origen and by Grotius from pagan examples, is unbecoming the dignity of Christ's character: I do not mean to represent them as exact parallels; only in the two leading ideas, of Generosity, and of Expiation, I suppose a resemblance in kind, though not in degree. and what if the Pagan ideas of Self-devotion, described in Livy viii. 9. x. 28. were really and originally derived from divine Revelation? See Mr. Bryant, of the αὐθρωποθυσία, and the Mystic Offering: p. 291. These These sacrifices were instituted probably in consequence of a prophetic tradition—transmitted to the people of Canaan. The mystical sacrifice of the Phenicians had these requisites, that a prince was to offer it; and his only son was to be the victim.—If the sacrifice of the Phenicians was a type of another to come; the nature of this last will be known from the representation by which it was prefigured. According to this, El, the supreme deity, was to have a son called Jeoud (Gen. xxii. 1.) to be offered up as a sacrifice to his Father, λιπον, by way of satisfaction, and redemption, τιμωρος δαιμος, to atone for the sins of others, and avert the just vengeance of God, αι της ωαιν φθορας, to prevent universal corruption, and at the same time general ruin. δουας την ψυχην λιπον αηι χωλων.—This mystical sacrifice was a type of something to come. How truly it corresponds to that, which I imagine it alludes to, I submit to the Reader's judgment. I think it must necessarily be esteemed a most wonderful piece of History. See Porphyry, de Abstin. II. p. 225. Volf. de idol. lib. I. c. 18. lib. II. c. 2.

Page 26.

The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all;

The punishment of that iniquity, meeting in him. Not only the sins of individuals, but the immense congeries of human guilt all combined, to fall in heaviest punishment on one devoted head. All we like sheep have gone astray, following with blind imitation the examples of our progenitors and our contemporaries. We have turned every one to his own way, each to his predominant and bosom sin.

It will diversify this sad subject, if we take our ideas of this stupendous satisfaction from our Divine Poet, who is at once accurately theological and sublimely poetic on this theme.

——— Man disobeying,
Disloyal breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of heaven;—
Die he or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid Satisfaction, death for death.
Say, heav'nly pow'rs, where shall we find such love?
And now, without redemption all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudged to death and hell
By doom severe, had not the Son of God,
In whom the fulness dwells of love divine,
His dearest mediation thus renewed:
Behold me then, me for him, life for life,
I offer; on me let thine anger fall;—
His words here ended but his meek aspect Silent yet spake, and breath'd immortal love.—
O thou in heaven and earth the only peace

Found
DISCOURSE VII.

Found out for mankind under wrath—
His crime makes guilty all his sons; thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds,
And live in thee transplanted, and from thee Receive new life. So Man, as is most just,
Shall satisfy for man, be judg'd, and die,
And dying rise, and rising with him raise
His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life.
So heavenly love shall out-do hellish hate,
Giving to death, and dying to redeem*

P. L. III. 203—299.

PAGE 27.

Euseb. D. E. i. 10. p. 36. Τα ὁμοια τους Ἱερεμίας επὶ προσωποῦ του Χριστοῦ επιφωνεὶ, λεγων, εγὼ ἃς αριστον αὐξάνων αγώμενον του Ἐυσταῖο. he nobly expresses the true import of this Sacrifice: μνήμη

* Milton's system of divinity taught, not only that man was redeemed, but likewise that a real price was paid for his redemption: dying to redeem therefore signifying only redemption in a vague uncertain sense, but imperfectly represents his system; so imperfectly, that it may as well be called the Socinian; the price paid, which implies a proper redemption, is wanting. But to pay a price implying a voluntary act, the Poet therefore well expresses it by giving to death, that is, giving himself to death; so that the sense of the line well expresses Milton's notion, Heavenly Love gave a price for the Redemption of mankind, and by virtue of that price really redeemed them.

BISHOP WARBURTON.
καὶ ημιν παραδος, αὐθεντιας τω Θεω δινεκες προσφε-ρειν. άδιο, ωκας μεν αυτοχρογιας το σωμα αχραυλον και αμιαλδε αυς φυλατειν ακιμεν, παιδος δε παθους και καλως άπανης της απο καιας κεκαθαρμενην την διανοιαν Αυτο προσονιμιζομεν, λογισμοις τε αδιαπλω-τοις, και διαθεσι αυτουργιω, δογματε Αλθειας ευσε-

PAGE 31.
toulois de πασιν αυθελεφαι δυναθαι, ουδε τους σφοδρα αγνωμονεσαλοις ηγεραι.

την γενεαν αυλου της διηγησει; Euf. D.E. iv.
toto libro.

Chrifti: τοιαυτης της αυτης μεχρι του Σαλαυου εγενελο οικονομια, ης ου μιαν αδιαν, αλλα και πλειους, ευρο αν της εθελοσας ζηλειν.

πρωιν μεν γαρ ο Δογμας διδασκει, ινα και νεκρων και ζωων κυριευση.

deuseren de, ἐπις τας ημιερας απομαζοντο αμαρθιας, ὑπὲρ ήμων προθες, και γενομενος ὑπὲρ ήμων καθεμα.

τριην, ὡς αν ιερευν Θεου και μεγαλη Θυσια ὑπὲρ του συμπαυσεο κοσμου προσαχθειν την επι ωαυτων Θεου.

τελαρην, ὡς αν αυλος της ωλυπλανους και δαιμονικης ενεργειας απορρητοις λογοις καθωρεσειν απεργασατο.

τερμην επι ταυτη, ὡς αν τοις αυλοις γνωριμοις και μαθηταις της κατα του Σαλαυου παρα Θεου ζωης την ελπιδα,
The Clemency of God might indeed pardon gratuitously, but not consistently with His moral government. Those who object to this method of salvation by Christ's Death would have made objections to any other method.

Prudent'ēr J. A. Fabricius: V. C. R. c. xli. Sunt qui sibi persuaserunt, nullam aliam vel Deo ipsi suissē viam ac rationem, quā peccatores nos homines in gratiam recuperet atque sibi reconciliaret, quam per mortem et satisfactionem Filii sui. Aliis contrā indignus ille modus Deo est visus, quos perstringit Augustinus, c. xi. Libri de agone Christiano: ' Sunt stulti, qui dicunt, ' Non poterat aliter sapientia Dei homines liberare? nisi fusci rer hominem, et nasceretur ex fœminâ, et a peccatoribus omnia illa pateretur? ' Quibus dicimus; poterat omnino, sed si aliter ' faceret similiter vestrae stultitiae displieret.' Tertia sententia probata eidem Augustino est libro xiii. de S. S. Trinitate, cap. 10, et 16. ' Etiam si innumerabilibus modis ad liberandos homines That the Messiah was to arrive at his kingdom, and to the power of be-flowing on his disciples the greatest good things, through Troubles and Death, no body can deny, who reads those words of Isaiah, ch. liii. with an attentive mind. Which of the Kings or Prophets can be named, to whom these things will agree? Certainly, none of them. And as to what the modern Jews conceive, that the Hebrew People themselves are here spoken of; who being disperfed into all nations should by their example and discourse make proselytes; this sense is inconsistent with many testimonies of the Sacred Writings, which declare that no misfortunes shall befal the Jews, which they have not deserved by their actions. And, the Order itself of the Prophetic Discourse will not bear such an interpretation. For the Prophet, or God himself says, This evil happened to him for the sins of my people. God's people are the Hebrew people: wherefore, he who is said to have endured such grievous things cannot be the same people. The ancient Hebrew Teachers more rightly confessed, that these things were spoken of the Messiah; which when some of the latter saw, they imagined two Messiahs, one of whom they call the son of Joseph, who endured many evils and a cruel death; the other the son of David, to whom all things succeeded prosperously: though it is much easier, and more agreeable to the writings of the Prophets, to acknowledge One, who arrived at his kingdom through adversity and death.

Thus reasonably did Grotius interpret this prophecy, till his political interests and his growing connections with the Socinians led him to gratify that thirst at the expence of Truth. 'After banishment had soured his temper, he seems to have written Comments, with a design to vex his adversaries.' Daubuz. p. 547. South's Serm. 111. 345. a memorable example, to deter men from commenting the Scriptures in a spirit of party, or in any spirit but that of Christian Truth and Love.

E 4

Grot.
It was for want of attention to the literary character of Jeremiah, that Grotius so weakly applied the 111d of Isaiah to that prophet: who, studious of the writings of all his predecessors in the Sacred Canon, is fond of imitating their style and mode of expression. Jeremiah, struck with the pathos of Isaiah's description, adapts to his own case those affecting expressions, so congenial to his own temperament. xi. 19. But I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered. Comp. Isai. liii. 7, 8.

When learned and rational critics incline to the extreme of rejecting the mystic sense, we may derive
DISCOURSE VII.

Derive a signal benefit from their reserve in this instance. Whenever such a critic as Grotius, under the envelope of Jewish predictions discerns the future fortunes of Christianity; we need not hesitate to admit interpretations, which are as it were extorted from so cautious an expositor, by the very force and energy of the prophetical style. It is but just to that excellent person, however parsimonious in the prophetical evidence, to acknowledge, that even his illustrations are sufficient to convince the unprejudiced, that the whole scheme of Christianity is involved in Judaism; and that their mutual relation is an unequivocal proof of Divine Prescience.

PAGE 52.

Grotius's Treatise, de Satisfacione Christi, cannot be too much commended. It hath been often printed, 1617. 1630. 1636. 1661. 1675. but the best edition is that of Langius, Hale, 1730. 4. In the first Chapter, he states the doctrine, and confirms it by testimonies of Scripture. In chh. ii, iii, by God's Sovrainty and dispensing power. In the sequel, he vindicates the justice of accepting a vicarious punishment: ch. vii, he treats of reconciliation: viii, of redemption: ix, of substitution: and x, he illustrates the Expiation by Christ's sacrifice, with so much piety and erudition, that it were to be wished, this short treatise might be annexed to the future editions of his Book de Veritate C.R. Fabricius, in delect. argg. c. 41. has added some ancient testimonies to those collected by Grotius. Some exceptions are made to Grotius's book, de Satisfacitione, by the excellent Buddeus, in his Theologia Dogmatica, 1723. p. 865—870, who yet highly commends his explications of the texts of Scripture, c. vii. and of the terms employed by the inspired writers.

Grotius thus expresses himself in a Letter to Vossius, (in the abridgment of Brandt's hist. liv. xxvii.) Crellius ne peut demontrer, qu'il est injuste, qu'un homme porte volontairement la peine, qui est due a un autre. et j'ai fait voir, que les hommes les plus fages ont ete d'un sentiment contraire, premierement dans mon Traite de la satisfacion; et dans mon Traite de Jure Belli, sous le titre de Communicatione Pænae; et je le ferai voir plus amplement par divers temoignages des Juifs dans mes Annotations sur Matth. xx. 28.

Elegant and apposite are the passages cited by Grotius, c. 11. from Cicero, pro Ligar. 'Non feci, non cogitavi. Ad judicem sic agi solet. Sed ego ad parentem loquor, Erravi, temerè feci, pœnitet, ad clementiam tuam confugio: delici veniam veniam peto: ut ignoscas oro.' and from Lac-tantius: 'Surgimus ad vindictam, NON QUIA \( \text{LÆSI SUMUS, f\c{e}D U T D I S C I P L I N A S E R V E T U R,} \) mores corrigitur, licentia comprimatur.'

C. ii. p. 76. Non est hic omittendum, philosophos veteres ex lumine rationis judicatis, nullo esse material magis relaxabile lege pœnali. Itaque Aristoteles TON ETIEIWN ait esse

\( \text{SU\c{U}C\c{O}M\c{E}N} V I N I N O V. \) et Sopater in epif\c{O}la ad Demettrium sic ait: \( \text{TO LEO} \c{O}M\c{\V}E\c{O}N E T I E \c{E}KES, DI\c{X}EION T\c{U}N A N-

S\c{E}NAN TON N\c{O}M\c{O}N F\c{O}WNY \c{O}PA\c{A}M\c{O}TH\c{O}M\c{E}N\c{O}V, A\c{M}E\c{M}I\c{P}H\c{E}IS EM\c{O}I-

DOXEN XAP\c{I}S\c{O}N A\c{L}\c{I}\c{B}\c{I}N\c{O}N KAI \c{E}LE\c{U}\c{B}E\c{R}\c{O}N \c{P}R\c{O}F\c{A}SIS. \)

Ex quibus sequitur, non quidem omnino non relaxandam suisse legem, sed non facile, neque

levi de causa. Atque id secutus est solus ille

\( \text{P\c{A}N\c{C}O\c{S}O\c{F}O\c{S} YO\c{M}O\c{D}\c{E}N\c{E}S.} \) Causam enim habuit gravissi-mam, lapso in peccatum genere humano, legem relaxandi; quia, si omnes peccatores morti \c{E}TE-

\c{P}R\c{E}N\c{A}E M\c{A}N\c{C}I\c{P}A\c{N}D\c{I} F\c{U}\c{I}SS\c{E}NT, P\c{E}RI\c{F}\c{E}N\c{T} F\c{U}N\c{D}I\c{T}\c{U}S EX

rerum natura duæ res pulcherrimæ, ex parte hominum religio in Deum, et ex parte Dei precipuæ in homines beneficentiae testatio.

P. 97. Ego, inquit Christus, \( \text{\c{E}X} \c{\O} \c{\U} \c{T} \c{\I} \c{O} \c{N} \c{A} \c{V}. \) hoc est, jus et potestatem, \( \text{habeo ponendi animam meam.} \)

Joh. x. 18. Nihil ergo iniquitatis in eo est, quod Deus, cujus est summa potestas ad omnia per se non injusta, nulli ipse legi obnoxious, cruciatus

ciatibus et morte Christi uti voluit, at statuendum exemplum grave adversus culpas immensas omnium nostrum, quibus Christus erat conjunctissimus natura, regno, vadimonio.

P. 106. Plane ut peri συγγνωμης dictum est ad veteribus, esse eam oude καλα νομον oude καλα νομου, αλλα υπερ νομου και υπερ νομου, id de hac divina gratia fit verissimum. Supra legem est, quia nos non nimur; Pro lege, quia non remittitur pæna: et ideo fit remissio, ut in posterum legi divinæ vivamus.

C. vi. He proves from Isai. liii. that Christ's sufferings were penal, and sacrificical: Christi sanguis effusus est, in remissionem peccatorum, ita ut ea remissio non obtigerit sine sanguinis effusione, sed per eam. Matth.xxvi.28. Hebr.ix.22.
He most ably refutes Socinus: Bis fallitur Socinus, cum ad eam remissiōnem quam nobis Deus concedit defumptam ex Jure vocem Acceptiliationis applicat: primum enim illa vox, etiam cum solutio nulla antecessit, ad jus crediti aptari poteft, ad poenas nec poteft, nec folet. Nemo enim unquam legit ab ullo veteri scriptore, indulgentiam crimini acceptilatio- nem vocari. -- Deinde vero, acceptilatio opponitur qualicunque sōlutiōni, unde figurātē definitur, solutio imaginaria. At Christus xulpo dedit vitam suam pro nobis Matth. xx. 28. Non est ergo hic acceptilatio—sed est remiśfio antecedente satisfac- tione.

Neque illud minus iniquum, et, ut ipsius voce utar, immane est, quod a nobis immanem Deum dicit statui. Nam finis iste satisfac- tionis superadditus nihilō graviores Christi perpeśiones facit; quas sine ulla crudelitate ipsi a Deo inſliext:Socinus cogitur fateri: imō, quo fines sunt plures, eo a crudelitatis specie longius absceditur. Nam crudelis est, qui frustra aut levi de causâ aliquem torquet.
mundi, per macerationem scilicet, quod exprimit Apocalypsis, aut per sanguinem, ut Petrus loquitur: quibus locis agni itidem facta mentio clarè monstrat quo Baptistæ respexerit.

I conclude these Collections as Grotius does his excellent Book de Satisfacțione Christi,
C. x. p. 218. in these weighty ideas: 'Sacrif-cium illud qui tollit, ne Sacerdotium quidem
Christo verum relinquit; contra manifestam Scripturæ autoritatem, quæ distinctam a Propheticâ et Regiâ Pontificiam dignitatem Christo adsignat: non figurâté dictam; sed maximè veram, quippe cum sacerdotium ipsius Levitico sacerdotio, quod verum fuit sacerdotium, oppo-natur, ut eundem generis species perfectior alteri species minus perfectæ: neque rectè inferri potuerit, necesse fuisset ut haberet quod offerret Christus, Hebr. viii. 3. nisi ex veritate ejus in quod constitutus erat Sacerdoti. Sed profectò minimè mirum est, si qui Christo gloriam natualem, hoc est, veri nominis Deitatem, sustule-runt, idem et Officia ipsius imminuunt; et beneficia ipsius praecipua recusant agnoscerè.

Tibi, Domine Jesu, ut vero Deo, ut vero Redemptori, ut vero Sacerdoti, ut veræ pro peccatis victimæ, cum Patre et Spiritù, uno tecum Deo, sit honos et gloria.

DISC-
PSALM II.

1. Why do the heathen rage,
   And the people imagine a vain thing?

2. The Kings of the earth set themselves,
   And the Rulers take counsel together,
   Against the Lord, and against his Anointed, saying,

3. Let us break their bands asunder,
   And cast away their cords from us.

4. He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh,
   The Lord shall have them in derision.

5. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath,
   And vex them in his sore displeasure.

6. Yet have I set my King
   Upon my holy hill of Sion.

7. I will declare the decree:
   The Lord hath said unto me, Thou art my Son,
   This day have I begotten Thee.

8. Ask
8. Ask of me.
   And I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance,
   And the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession.

9. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron;
   Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10. Be wise now therefore, O ye Kings:
    Be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11. Serve the Lord with fear,
    And rejoice with trembling.

12. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry,
    And so ye perish from the way,
    When his wrath is kindled but a little.
    Blessed are all they, that put their trust in him.

ON the principles advanced in the Second of these Discourses, the double sense of Prophecy is deduced from the constitution of the Jewish theocracy, as at once a religious establishment and a civil polity: and from the natural genius and situation of the Prophet, whose thoughts are enlarged larged and extended into a religious allegory, by the unconstrained inspiration of congenial ideas superinduced on those of Reason. I shall attempt at present, to give an illustrious instance of divine and spiritual ideas adapted to the rational and political, in the person of king David. It was natural and in character for this Prince at the head of a flourishing Monarchy, as a consummate politician and successful warrior, to revolve in his mind his splendid victories, the protection of the deity, the unavailing opposition of his enemies, the union and felicity of his people, the enlargement of his dominion, and the perpetuity of the crown in his house and family. This is a train of thinking familiar to Princes, to such especially as, like David, are of a martial genius, have been prosperous and victorious, and are actuated by that magnanimity and love of their people, which makes ambition virtue.

It was worthy of the wisdom of Inspiration, to give that sublime direction to these elevated thoughts, as to form them into a pre-fage of a divine empire, which, like the theocratic kingdom of David, should rise superiour to hostile force, should extend to remotesest nations, and be administered by a divine and human character, both combined in one, and corresponding to both parts of the prophetic emblem, at once, the Son of David, and the Son of God.

It is far more consonant to that progressive order, and to those easy and prepared transitions, which every where excite our admiration in the works and word of God, to discern a double sense in this and other prophetic Psalms; than to imagine the royal Prophet abruptly entering on so divine a theme, without any human or preparatory circumstance, to lead him to this exalted contemplation. The stability and perpetuity of the theocratic throne in the house of David, was the darling promise made to that Monarch: and on all occasions he expresses his grateful sense of it, in words so devoutly copious, as to paint the fulness and transport of his mind.

≠ 1 Chron. xvii. xix. xxviii. xxix.
It is pleasing to reflect, that this illustrious prophecy was given to David in the very zenith of his own and his people's glory, before either was impaired by his crimes and misfortunes. It was written to commemorate the settlement of the united kingdoms of Judah and of Israel in his person and family; after a series of glorious events, such as, his generosity to the house of Saul—his third anointing, to be king over the whole nation—the taking of Mount Sion—the flourishing state of his family—his double victory over the Philistines, and burning their idols—his successive triumphs over the Moabites, Syrians, Idumeans, Ammonites—his first establishment of Religion, by the removal of the Ark—and, on his intention to build a magnificent temple for its reception, the declaration of God by the prophet Nathan: Thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever. This vision was of much higher import, than the civil succession in his family: and such, the king himself considered it in his devout address to God. And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, and thy words be true: and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant. Therefore now let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it, and with thy blessing let the house of thy servant be blessed for ever.

2 Me. MS. 244. 642. 3 2 Sam. vii. 16.

That the Psalm before us is not merely historical, but also prophetic, appears both from its traditionary sense, and from its internal characters. When the Apostles alleged it to convert the Jews, it was agreeable to the received sense of the whole Jewish Church; and they readily admitted the force of the argument. But they also reasoned in this and other instances on the internal character of the prophetic Psalms, and demonstrated that they were applicable in their full meaning neither to David nor to the Jewish Law, but to a new order of religious events. Besides the traditional sense, we have the criterion of rational criticism, on the intrinsic import of these poems, considered as very ancient monuments of the Jewish Religion. If they contain principles, contrary to the genius of that religion, and characteristic of another and a more enlarged plan: if they disclose high and mysterious doctrines, remote from the ideas of those times and of that singular people: the proof results, from the exact and full agreement with a new scene of things since disclosed, but then remote and distant, and not within the limits of human probability or conjecture.

The three first verses of this Psalm describes the hostility and disaffection of the tributary nations to the sceptre of David.

The second clause 5, represents the inefficacy of those hostile confederacies, against the power of the Theocracy:

The third part 6, rises to a more august and splendid theme, the inauguration of a Soverain, whose Empire should crush the 5 v. 4—6. 6 v. 7—9.

most powerful opposition, and extend to all Nations.

In the fourth clause, this new Empire is described as claiming the willing homage of all other Soverainties, as an Empire over the mind and hearts of men, established on eternal sanctions, both penal and remuneratory.

If we compare this poem with the events of the life and reign of David, illustrious as they were; we find the ideas and expressions too disproportioned to the subject, to admit of a literal application. For neither were his enemies so powerful, nor their submission so complete, nor the reign of David so prosperous or extensive, as to verify the amplitude of the style and composition: which, in its application to a spiritual kingdom, universal and eternal, corresponds both to the idea and the event with so much precision, that many Critics have in the interpretation of this Psalm disclaimed a double sense, and have applied the whole to Christ, and to him only. But to me it appears much more agreeable to the genius of Prophecy, under the civil character of king David and the prosperous events of his reign to express the glories and triumphs of the kingdom of Christ. This exposition is supported by the best authorities, ancient and modern: particularly Bishop Lowth has so finely illustrated the double sense of this Poem, that I cannot express it better, than in his manner.

David here sustains a double character, personal and allegorical. When we read this poem with a view to the personal character of that prince, we discern a perspicuous historical sense, abundantly illustrated by the memoirs of those times. But the ardour of the expression, the figurative style, and amplification of the ideas, plainly intimate, that a greater and sublimer sense is couched under the historic argument. If by these indications, we investigate the interior sense, resulting from the allegoric character of David, this furnishes an interpretation, not only more august and elevated, but more clear and apposite. Whatever appears too bold and lofty for the literal subject, perfectly corresponds to the dignity of a divine person and of an universal Empire. When we have thus surveyed each part separately, we next consider them as united. Then appears in all its lustre the elegance and sublimity of this divine allegory. We see a perfect harmony and consent between two distinct images; in both, resembling features, and a just analogy: both indeed founded on the truth of things; but the mystic sense so superior, as to be evidently first in the intention of the inspired writer: all whose ideas, thus interpreted, rising in just gradation from human to divine, terminate in an exalted revelation of the kingdom of Christ.

But in order to vindicate and illustrate the spiritual sense; under such a constitution as the kingdom of Israel, the transition from a primary and civil, to a secondary and religious application was effected without any violence to either of the two ideas; which under any other polity could not have been so happily combined. The Israelites, it is well known, were governed by a theocracy, the whole authority and power of the State being exercised by God himself, as their King: but it is not so generally considered, that the executive Power was vested in that Divine Person, who is styled the Angel of the Covenant, and the Angel of God's presence. The human administration, in the house of David, was a mere vice-royalty: and those princes, even the most opulent and absolute of them all, sat on the throne of the Lord as kings, were anointed unto the Lord to be chief governors, and reflected all their majesty from the Lord who magnified them. Thus, in the Queen of Sheba's court-style, Blessed be the Lord thy God, who delighted in thee, to set thee on his throne, to be king for the Lord thy God.

---

DISCOURSE VIII.

9 Jof. contrà Apion. ii. 17.
10 1 Chron. xxix. 22—25. 11 2 Chron ix. 8.
The ancient Israelites, from their own Scriptures, were not unacquainted with the mysterious distinction of Persons in the Unity of God: and they might thence collect, that the Word, or Second Person, the Son, as He is styled in this Psalm, was their Soverain Lord, or properly, the King over the people of Israel. It appears from a very memorable passage of the book of Exodus, xxiii. 20. confirmed by the whole analogy of Scripture, that the divine author of our Redemption was the immediate agent in all the civil blessings and chastisements of God's people. Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice; provoke him not, for he will not pardon your transgressions; for my name is in him. For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, &c. to possess the promised land. Isaiah describes this wonderful administration with his usual sublimity, in that part of his prophecy, which expresses the prayer and confession of the Jews,
DISCOURSE VIII.

Jews, before their conversion to their ancient king and legislator 12.

He was their saviour: in all their affliction, he was afflicted,
And the Angel of his presence saved them.
In his love and in his pity, He redeemed them.
And He bare them and carried them all the days of old.
But they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit: Therefore, he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.
Then he remembered the days of old, Moses and his people;
Saying, where is he that brought them up out of the sea, with the shepherd of his flock?
Where is he, that put his Holy Spirit within him,
That led them by the right hand of Moses, with his glorious arm Dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

12 Isai. lxiii. 8—12; How
DISCOURSE VIII.

How magnificent an idea does this contemplation give us, of the theory of Christianity! When in the Gospels we behold the lamb of God in his humiliation and sufferings: some are so blinded, as to consider him, merely as a wise and virtuous Man, imparting Lessons of Truth and Virtue to that ungrateful Age and Country. We discern his power indeed and his God-like attributes, displayed throughout his Ministry and Miracles, even in his lowly and afflicted state: But it is in his pre-existent character, that the radiance of his divinity beams forth without a cloud. His potent voice called Nature into being: he created Man: he passed sentence on their mortal sin: he promised to redeem their race: he it was, who began that beneficent work, by the calling of Abraham, accompanied him as his Guardian-God, and conversed with him in person, preluding to his Incarnation. He was the redeeming Angel, with whom Jacob covenanted, that he should be his God; and to whom he prays in the blessing of the Tribes: as the Shepherd and the rock of Israel, the God of their fathers, the Almighty, who should bless them.

13 Gen. xlix. 25.
It would be easy, were it not too prolix, to give many instances of the agency of the Divine Logos in the Jewish history: the nature and genius of whose government is described in glowing colours by Isaiah, when its splendour was revived in the reign of Hezekiah:

When Judah ruled with God,
And was faithful with his saints.

He sets before us, Ch. xxxiii.

13. Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done;
And ye that are near, acknowledge my might.

14. The sinners in Zion are afraid, Fearfulness hath surprized
the hypocrites:

15. He that walketh righteously,
And speaketh uprightly:

Hos. xi. 12.
DISCOURSE VIII.

Its temporal sanctions.

16. He shall dwell on high;
His place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks;
Bread shall be given him,
his waters shall be sure.

Its regal splendour.

17. Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty:

Victory, 18, 19.

Its titles.

22. For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, Irresistible power, terminating in redemption, and a spiritual kingdom.

23. The Lord is our king:
he will save us.

24. The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity*

From this view of the theocratic government, appears the exact propriety of that species of double sense, which celebrates an eternal and spiritual kingdom under the images, proper to a temporal and local sovereignty. That sovereignty, when limited to the territories of the House of David, was vested in the same omnipotent Person, who now rules as Mediator this whole earthly system. What could be more logically just, as well as critically elegant, than, by the local events of the temporal kingdom of the Messiah, to adumbrate the destined glories of his spiritual and eternal Empire?

The transition from the temporal Vice-roy to the Divine Soverain, was, on the same ideas, exact and accurate: including in the parallel all the regal and political virtues. Hence, with singular emphasis, the Titles of the Messiah, the Christ, or Anointed, are ascribed to Jesus. They are titles of royalty, transferred originally from the Chief to the deputed King, and reverting to the theocratic scepter.

The Kings of the House of David are represented in Scripture as 'Sons of God,' because they were his Vice-roys with perpetual succession. The Sonship and the Sovranty are inseparably connected. The LXXXIst Psalm finely exemplifies this and other parts of the theocratic system.

\[\text{\textit{v}. 26.}\]
v. 26. He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father,
   My God, and the Rock of my Salvation;
   Also, I will make him my first-born,
   Higher than the Kings of the Earth.

36. His Seed shall endure for ever,
   His throne as the Sun before me.

It is only in the civil and historical sense, that the words, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee, are applicable to David: My son, as the adopted heir of the theocracy; this day, of his complete inauguration to the full sovereignty over the united Tribes.

This Title of Sonship was so annexed to the theocratic scepter, that it is given even to the most unworthy branches of the house of David. Thus, Ezekiel, xxi. 10. expresses with great energy the cessation of the Vice-royalty till Christ should rule in person. The sword contemneth the scepter of my Son, of Zedekiah, as an ignoble wood. Thus saith the Lord, remove the diadem and take off the Crown: this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high; high; I will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him. Such is the sentence of deposition denounced on the last of the Kings of the House of David, reserving the hereditary succession to the Messiah.

The beauty of the image, expressed by this relation of paternity and sonship, consists in the analogy between the divine and the deputed sovereignty. As the Son of God, in his Office of Mediator acts with delegated powers, to the glory of the Father; so the temporal King, as deputed to sit on the Throne of the Lord over Israel, is with great elegance and concinnity decorated with the filial title: Thou art my son. But as this appellation is borrowed from the filial character of Christ, it is properly and strictly applicable to Christ only: and we see at first glance, how much more aptly it applies to the great antitype, than to the type himself. But the high import of this Title, as proper to Christ, demands a special elucidation. It is applied in the New
New Testament, both to his Resurrection, and to his Eternal Deity: not, as if these two senses were so distinct or different, as to be incompatible; but as the one implies the other. St. Paul to the Romans teaches us the connection between these two ideas: He was declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the Spirit of Holiness, by the Resurrection from the dead. The two ideas, of the Deity and Resurrection of Christ, are here combined, as cause and effect. They are elsewhere represented distinctly: his Resurrection; The promise, which was made unto the Fathers, God hath fulfilled the same unto us their children, in that he hath raised up Jesus again; as it is also written in the second Psalm: Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee. Here by a figure not unusual in Scripture, the Earth is represented as a common Mother, and Christ, being raised to life by the power of God, is represented as born of the Parent-earth. The inspired author of the Epistle to the Hebrews applies the same words, to prove that Jesus is so much higher than the Angels, as he hath by inheritance a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the Angels said he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

14 See Bishop Kidder, I. 285. words,
Discourse VIII.

The same sacred writer consistently applies these words to Christ's immortal priesthood 15, the effect and consequence both of his divine nature and of his resurrection. From all which citations illustrating each other, Thou art my Son, strictly denotes his divine Filiation; this day, expresses that eternal now so suitable to him, who is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever; an easy consequence of his filiation and offices is his revival from death, which could not detain so illustrious a victim 16.

The first idea, which this Psalm impresses on our minds, is of a violent and powerful opposition to the purpose of God, whether respecting the throne of David, or the kingdom of Christ. In the historic view, it respects the confederacy of the tributary Princes to dismember his dominions and renounce their dependency 17. As it respects the Christian Religion, it merits a fuller illustration, from the history of persecution in all ages of the Church.

15 v. 5. vii. 24—27. 16 Acts iv. 25. 33.

In the character of Christ and his Gospel, the union of transcendent goodness with irresistible power is a clear and certain mark of divinity. In human life, the gentler virtues are in themselves defenceless, weak, and inefficacious, and they generally solicit the protection of others. But in divine things, that meek and quiet Spirit, which is the ornament of Religion, is attended with a secret energy, which bears down all opposition.

Persecution in its cause and origin is an opposition to Truth, which however impious or unnatural, is deducible from the influence of evil, human and spiritual, on the state of Society. The utmost efforts of persecution have been employed, to frustrate and suppress the gracious work of Man's Redemption. And those efforts would would have been effectual, if this work, or this counsel, had been of men. For nothing human, however powerful; much less, could aught, so feeble as our infant-church, have resisted or sustained the Jewish and Gentile persecutions. As for other wise purposes, so especially, to discriminate his revealed will from human inventions, God hath permitted Christianity to undergo this fiery trial. Nor does it seem to be the intention of his Providence, that some great opposition should ever cease to explore its Truth, in some form or other, either of external violence, or of literary controversy. Accordingly, persecution, of the most exquisite severity, hath prevailed to a degree that makes it the most surprizing phenomenon in the history of Man. It began in Jewish envy, which could not be satiated but by the Cross of Christ, by the dispersion, imprisonment, and death of his first followers. Gentile violence, enforced at intervals for ccc years by the greatest civil power that ever existed, filled the Church with Martyrdoms.

1 Chron. xviii. xix.
The tyranny of the Cæsars was gradually extended from Rome to Italy and the Provinces. Nothing can be more deceitful or delusive than the specious apologies by which that arbitrary government hath, of late, been exculpated from the malignity of persecution. If we were possessed of the ancient collection of Edicts against the Christians, formed by the civilian Domitius, de Officio Proconsulis, we should better know the pretences and extent of the Persecutions. One circumstance alone marks their atrocity. The Christians were put to the question, a kind of punishment, never inflicted in any other Gentile State, merely for opinions. The descriptions and records we have of those Tortures are among the most shocking monuments of human savageness. In Africa, they were condemned to the Mines: a sentence of extreme rigour. Others were exposed to wild beasts, which sometimes were compelled to fury, and reluctantly violated the bodies of the Martyrs.

19 Cyprian. epist. 76—80. ad martyres in mettulis.
The Neronian persecution, related by Tacitus, chills us with horror: that of Domitian, anno 94, is more remarkable for the dignity than the number of the Confessors. But if we consider the sanguinary genius of the Roman people, their delight in cruel spectacles, their gladiators, amphitheaters, theriomachies (for we must invent new words to express their savage sports) their very feasts and funerals polluted with the blood of slaves and citizens: we may justly infer, that the Christian martyrdoms, urged both by civil and religious animosities, were numerous, though only the distinguished victims, of eminent sanctity and station, were recorded in the martyrologies. The cause of the Gentile Persecutions, authorized even by their best Princes, was honourable to the Christians. It was their heroic firmness in rejecting and opposing the magnificent idolatries of the Empire, their constancy in refusing a grain of incense to their altars, and their noble profession of the exclusive tenet of one God and one Mediator.

None of the early persecutions were more keen and authorized, than that of the philosophic Emperor, M. Aurelius, who seems to have sacrificed every sentiment of humanity to the dictates of Stoicism, to his own apathy, and to the rigour of the Roman Laws in asserting the established idolatries.

Severus attempted to suppress Christianity by forbidding any new conversions.

In those ages, the Presidents of Provinces did not wait for the Imperial Edicts, but carried on a system of persecution for their own advantage and to gratify the populace. Many Christians were obliged to purchase their safety by money: and some fell into apostacy, expressed by sacrificing and offering incense. At length Diocletian's Edict, A. 303. commanded all the Churches to be demolished and the Scriptures every where destroyed throughout the Empire. The characters of those times are such, as to evince, that neither the will nor the power of the persecuting Princes were checked in their exertion: and the whole history of Persecution furnishes this conclusion: that the constancy of the Martyrs was the result of a clear conviction of the Truth of Facts, for which they suffered: and that an unarmed and passive Religion could not have sustained the Roman Persecutions, without the Divine Protection. Thus Persecution itself is an evidence of a Revealed Religion: but Persecution predicted gives to that evidence the force of Demonstration; and Christ himself, and the ancient Prophets foretold that this Religion should first be persecuted, and then established, by the civil powers of the world.

22 Judaeos fieri sub gravi pæna vetuit: idem etiam de Christianis sanxit. Spartan. in Sev. c. 16, 17.
23 Moslem. R. C. p. 482.

Antichristian malignity succeeded to that of gentilism, and raged for a thousand years, under the Papacy and the New Empire, which like the Jews and Gentiles combined their forces, to extirpate all that was venerable or amiable from among mankind. At length, Persecution brought forth a monster of cruelty and injustice, which from the beginning of the xiiiith Century, anno 1206, deluged the world with murder, and was the genuine parent of those massacres in Piedmont, where the Alpine snows were red with Valdensian and Protestant blood; of all that carnage in Spain and the Netherlands, in France, and in Ireland, whose horrors are recent and too authentic in the records of History.

* Euseb. viii. 17.

Civilization and the Reformed Religion have in a good measure abolished persecution in all the Protestant States; the Reformation itself having first sustained as sanguinary persecutions, as the primitive Church. But in the present age, another species of opposition hath been adopted, and is likely to continue long in the world: I mean, that of polemic and literary Inidelity. If there was any flaw, or weak part in the Christian Religion, it would have cause to dread this literary inquisition, more more than all the fires of Popery, more than the rods and axes and tortures of Gentilism.

The intention of divine providence in permitting this unremitted opposition, and in rendering it ineffectual, is, incontestably to evince, that the Religion which could sustain such trials, is a Divine instrument to reform and bless those, whose Faith and Constancy should be approved.

* 9. Then shall he speak unto them in his wrath,
   And vex them in his sore displeasure.—
 9. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron,
   Thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

If we reflect on the revolutions in the greatest empires, by which their hostility to Christ has been signally defeated; we shall find these predictions amply verified. The excision of Jerusalem by the Romans; the subversion of the idolatrous Roman Empire by the barbarous invasions; the demolition of the Papacy, weakened and dismembered by by the Reformation, and in God's good time to be broken in pieces and annihilated:
—are such effects of Christianity rejected, persecuted, and corrupted, as demonstrate, that this holy and passive Religion is under the invincible protection of the Divine Providence. The Psalm, we are commenting, is so strong a confirmation of this Theory, that, I believe few of its Readers are unimpressed with its true subject: a mythical description of a Religion, violently opposed, and powerfully persecuted; triumphant over its persecutors; the perfecuted Religion established, universal, and perpetual; and conferring true felicity on all who virtuously adhere to it, and place their faith and reliance on its divine author.

Be this then the first proof of the divinity of the Christian Religion, which this prophetic Psalm affords us, as it is so sublimely and devoutly expressed by the Apostles: Lord, thou art God, which hast made heaven and earth, and the sea, and all that in them is; who by the mouth of thy servant David hast said, Why did the heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? the kings of the earth stood up, and the rulers were gathered together, against the Lord and against his Christ. For of a truth, against thy holy child Jesus, whom thou hast anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Israel, were gathered together, for to do whatsoever thy hand and thy counsel determined before to be done.

It was my intention to have completed such observations as have occurred to me on this prophetic Psalm; but the copiousness of the matter would extend this Discourse to an immoderate length. I shall therefore at this time only subjoin a few conclusions, from this single Topic. And

First, The extreme guilt and danger of a prevailing opposition to Christianity, either by a national spirit of apostacy and unbelief, or by popular viciousness in its external profession, or by the personal resistance of eminent individuals, whether in public or literary departments.
Great-Britain (a mere spot, though a most highly favoured spot in the Empire of Christ) hath of late years gone portentous lengths in an avowed infidelity; her men of fashion and her polite writers have openly abetted this fatal apostacy; which hath visibly produced the worst effects, first on the manners of the people, and then on the national glory and greatness. Pardon my honest yet respectful freedom, if, while all men's minds are oppressed with the weight of public loss and danger*, I earnestly exhort you, not to be inattentive to the only means of safety: the Christian faith efficaciously reforming the manners of the Nation. For the Christian Religion itself, we have nothing to fear. The inefficacy of all opposition to it, is as evident from experience, as from prophecy. If that Religion hath prevailed in the world, notwithstanding the opposition of the Jewish Rulers and of the Roman Empire; it is not now to be shaken or subverted by any local apostacy, much less by the puny efforts of personal impiety, by the insidi-

* This was written 1782. licity of individuals of whatever rank, or by the sophistry of the most eloquent writers.

But with respect to the danger of unbelief and apostacy, to nations and to individuals, it is as demonstrable both by argument and fact, as it is strongly expressed in this prophecy:

*He that sitteth in the heavens shall laugh;
The Lord shall have them in derision.*

This bold figure is very expressive of the unavailing efforts of human malignity against the purposes of God; in whose fight, they are contemptible, and defeated by the feeblest and most unlikely means.
Human or diabolic malice, opposing divine Truth, is not a formidable object; but a despicable enemy, and an easy conquest.
He shall laugh them to scorn: it is added, he shall vex them in his sore displeasure. The victory is achieved: the conquest is as complete, as it seemed improbable. This was of old conspicuously verified, in the destruction and dispersion of the Jewish nation, in the defeat and death of persecuting Princes, and in the ruin and dismembering of
of the Roman Empire. And are we so infatuated, as to suppose we are able to make ourselves Exceptions to the constant measures of divine Providence, annexing general happiness only to the degrees of Christian Faith and Virtue. Many degrees of both undoubtedly remain among us: Let us labour to convince the enemies of Revelation by the most persuasive argument, that the Christians, professedly and avowedly as well as sincerely such, are as true friends to the Community by their moderation, charity, and piety, as the Infidels of all ranks are ruinous and destructive to it by their luxury and profligacy, by their unprincipled selfishness, and their portentous impiety. The revival of the Christian Faith and Manners would, by reviving the virtue of the nation, revive its fortitude, its loyalty, its resources, and its public spirit, and these would soon be followed by its unanimity, glory, and felicity.

For us, who receive with all gladness the word of God, let our faith be attended with submission and duty. Serve the Lord with fear, fear, and rejoice with reverence. Be deeply convinced of the authority, as well as reasonableness, of his most amiable law; study to conform your tempers to its Divine Spirit; not doubting of the truth and certainty of that unspeakable happiness, which is the result of a virtuous conduct, in professed subjection to the Gospel of Christ: a happiness expressed with so much energy in the last words* of this Psalm; Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him.

* Ultimum comma non nisi per enormem impietatem ad Davidem referri posse animadvertit Calvinus: in Thes, theol. phil. i. 573.
DE Sacra Poefi Hebr. Pr. XI. de Allegoriâ Mysticâ. Psalmi secundi argumentum est, David frustra adversantibus inimicis Dei decreto in regno confirmatus. Duplex est persona Davidis, propria et allegorica. Si carmen hoc perlegentes primo in propria Davidis persona oculos desigimus, sententia apparent fatis et per se perspicua, et sacræ historiæ luce abunde illustrata: per totum quidem verbis ardentior, figuris elaboratæ, et semel atque iterum ita exaggerata est dictio, ac si consultò nos moneret, majus quiddam ac sublimius intus inclusum latere, atque ultro etiam in argumenti penetralia aditum aperiret. Quod si ea secuti indicia, ad interiorem jam partem animum intendimus, et ad personam Davidis allegoricam eadem accommodamus; major rerum ordo protinus exsurgit, nec modo sublimior et augustior, sed clarior etiam emergit sensus. Si quæ prius audaciae videbantur, si quæ paullo elatiora, quam proximæ materiæ condition ferret; ea jam apparent imprimit aperta, expressa, dilucida, et ad potioris argumenti digna-dignitatem præclare comparata*. Postquam hoc modo duas hæc argumenti partes foerfum et singulas attentæ perpendicularis, easdem intueamur tandem conjunctas. Hoc in situ jam elucebit elegantissimi carminis venustas omnis et sublimitas. Licebit perspicere duarum imaginum, et magnam inter se distantiam, et perpetuam tamen conspirationem et consensus, et quasi inter cognatas, oris ac lineamentorum omnium miram similitudinem; utriusque analogiam accurate servari; utrique suam veritatem competere, ita ut quæ ex altera expressa est, ipsa tamen archetypa videri possit; dictioni novam lucem pariter inferri, ac sensibus elationem et pondus accedere, dum ab humilioribus ad sublimiora, ab humanis ad divina, facili gradatione ascendunt, donec præcipua argumenti pars et in clarissimo lumine collocetur, et summum altitudinis gradum obtineat.
D I S C O U R S E  V I I I .

* Nota Editoris, Hoc ergo si ita est, si ob Pauli auctoritatem dubitari nequit, quin de Christo ejusque Resurrectione et Regno psalmus agat: quid est, quod suadeat eum et de Davide accipere? Non nego, Davidis victorias, majore verbis audacia data, ejusmodi carmine celebrari potuisse; aliorumque infuper, de quibus nemo hic cogitare su片面, regum Hierosolymitanorum: at meminerimus, orationem non ad eos omnes pertinere, de quibus simile quid dici posset, sed ad illum unum, de quo agitur: qui si hic Christus est, dimittamus Davidem.
To illustrate the Double Sense by examples from polite Literature, will shew at once the supreme elegance and appositeness of this mode of information. The most undiscerning Reader is warmed with that blaze of Poetry which Horace displays in those Odes which describe the War of Troy or the Rebellion of the Titans. But the Critic who discerns the Antonian party under the persons of the vanquished Trojans, Agrippa and Augustus in the arms and insignia of the Homeric gods and heroes, has a far superior taste of those exquisite allegories:

Eheu, quantus equis, quantus adest viris
Sudor! quanta moves funera Dardanæ Genti! jam galeam Pallas et ægida Currusque et rabiem parat. lib. i. od. xv.

and still more sublimely and distinctly, l. iii. od. iv.

— scimus ut impios
Titanas immanemque turmam
Fulmine sfuslerit corusco

Qui terram inertem, qui mare temperat
Ventosum, et umbras regnaque tristia,
Divosque mortalesque turbas
Imperio regit unus æquo.
DISCOURSE VIII.

Sed quid Typhoeus aut validus Mimas
Aut quid minaci Porphyrion statu,
Quid Rhoeus evolvisque truncis
Enceladus jaculator audax

Contra sonantem Palladis ægida
Poffent ruentes? hinc avidus stetit
Volcanus, hinc matrona Juno, et Nunquam humeris positurus arcum

Qui rore puro Castalæ lavit Crines solutos—

where he introduces in the person of the Delian god, his hero Octavius, and the Aetian victory.

Thus in another place he speaks of the army of Cassius and Brutus, —domitos Herculea manu

Telluris juvenes, unde periculum
Fulgens contremuit domus
Saturni veteris.—lib. ii. ode xii.

The imagery in these quotations may be paralleled with that of David in the 11d Psalm, so far as concerns the poetical ordonnance. Powerful enemies oppose the erecting of a just empire; and are themselves defeated by the will of heaven. This parallel is the more pertinent, as the Roman empire, empire, settled in the person of Augustus, was in the councils of heaven the splendid theatre, on which Omnipotence was to display the triumphs of the Christian Religion.

I produce this instance from a classical and correct Latin Poet with the greater freedom, because it refutes that assertion of a learned Critic, that no other Language or Poetry, but that of the Hebrews, furnishes examples of a double sense. Mihi vero perquam suspecta sunt, quae soli omnino sacro Hebraeorum carmini propria dicuntur. J. D. Michaelis on Bp. Lowth. Pr. xi. p. 223. But there is this great disparity between poetry and prophecy, between the civil and religious use of the double sense. In the Poet, on the ideas of gentilism, the type is far more illustrious than the antitype. The war of the giants and the thunders of Jupiter exceed the subject of which they are emblems; and weaken the effect of the allegory. But in Prophecy, it is exquisitely perfect: as sublime and poetical images drawn from the truth of history, are employed in the type, merely to introduce an antitype transcending all ideas of terrestrial greatness. Thus, Psal. lxxii. the reign of Solomon, fortunate and pacific, is indeed an illustrious subject: but its lustre disappears, when set in comparison with the universal reign of the Messiah.

The
The 14th Eclogue of Virgil is a regular Prophetic Allegory drawn from the source of the Sacred Writings: and every one sees, that the felicity of the Times described by the Poet was far greater than could have been completed in the historic subject. This poem, fixed in every one's mind and memory, made the ideas of Redemption familiar and intelligible to the Roman people. Constantini oratio ad SS. coëtum. c. 20. 21.

PAGE 96.

The royal line of David by Solomon being extinct in Jeconiah, the right to the crown passed into the line of Nathan, second son of David, to Salathiel, and Zorobabel: who having two sons, Abiud and Rhesa, the royalty descended to the line of Abiud, of which Joseph was the last: who espousing the Virgin Mary of the line of Rhesa, Jesus was both naturally the Son of David and legally the heir to his kingdom. Thus the learned Dr. South's Sermons, Vol. III. p. 279.
The preservation and lineal succession in the house of David, from that Monarch to the reign of Domitian, is singularly providential. Of the two kingdoms into which the Nation was divided, there were xx Kings of Judah of the house of David in above 500 years; while in half that period an equal number obtained the x tribes, in very few instances the Son succeeding to the Father. Josephus ascribes this disparity to the better moral character of the kings of Judah: but, allowing the force of that solution in the few instances he alleges, (though all were defective, even the kings of Judah failed, Ecclus. xlix. 4.) yet we cannot but observe the singular protection even of the worst and feeblest of them, when assaulted by the whole power of the x tribes, of Egypt and Africa, of Arabia, Assyria, and Babylon, as the completion of that prophecy, Psalm lxxxix. 35. I have sworn by my holiness, that I will not fail David: his seed shall remain for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. When this royal house was so far extinct by the cruel ambition of Athaliah, as to exist only in the infant Joash, the care of Providence in his preservation had an evident view to the King that was to descend from him: οὗτος ὁμιν ὁ βασιλεὺς, says the good Jehoiada, εξ ἐκείνης τῆς οἰκίας, ἵνα του Θεου ὁμιν προφητευσάτω, βασίλευειν αὐτῷ του παῖς τοῦ χρόνου. Jof. Antt. ix. 7. 2. vid. viii. 12. 6. In
In Psalm lxxxix, there is an accurate distinction between the children of David, his civil successors, and the Son or seed of David, The Messiah, of whom so magnificent things are said, vi. 37. His seed shall endure for ever, And his throne as the sun before me.

See Bp. Kidder. P. I. ch. 3. and Dr. Kennicott, on Psalm lxxxix. When we discern the Deity so solicitous for the perpetuity of a domestic succession, we may be well assured, that his whole administration of the world itself is intimately connected with the fortunes of that family. We conclude then with Le Clerc (whom I cite in preference, as a rational Commentator) ' promissa hæc de æternitate regni in Davidis prole, in nullo impleta sunt nisi in Jesu, Mariae Filio, a Davide oriundo, qui etiamnum in coelo regnat, atque ad consummationem omnium rerum regnaturus est.'

---

In the Epistle from the Christians relating to the martyrs of Lyons and Vienne (lately translated from Euseb. V.1—3. Niceph. iv. 16—18. with learned and judicious Notes) mention is made of the σανγυπις or ' General Convention, on occasion of the great annual solemnity, when the sixty nations of Gaul met at the altar sacred to Rome and Augustus. 'The figure of this celebrated altar may be seen on medals.
and it is particularly delineated by Meineftrier, "histoire de la ville to Lyons." p. 68.—Notes, p. 195. Vid. P. de Marca, de Primatibus. §. cxi—cxi. Gruter. p. cccxx. cdxxxi. which memorable narration, in Euseb. shews how great an obstacle the Pagan solemnities threw in the way of Christianity: so as to produce a direct contrast between them, in which the Pagans had all the privilege of barbarous and wanton punishment, the Christians only the passive part of constancy and martyrdom.

In the Pagan Establishment, the connexion between Religion and the State was inseparable: The cities of Asia had temples, holy rites, and festival days in common. They had also a common priesthood, termed in the Roman law, Asiaarchia. Each city chose yearly an Asiaarch. Notes. p. 99. See Wolfius on Acts xix. 31.

Notes on the Martyrdoms at Smyrna and Lyons. P. 200. 'We know that a rabble of Egyptian, Syrian, Etruscan and Grecian deities, obtained the privileges of citizenship at Rome; and that the sixty nations of Gaul concurred in erecting an altar to a city and a living man. The politicians, who devised or who established so strange a community of Gods, would not have excluded Christ from their pantheon. But it is is probable, that they soon discerned the unsociable nature of the Christian Religion, and on that account persecuted its professors. I speak of the unsociable nature of the Christian Religion; because a Religion founded on the Unity of the Supreme Being, is necessarily unsociable, and can never be incorporated with any species of polytheism. They who understand the genius of Christianity will not suppose unsociable and intolerant to be synonymous. I have transcribed this excellent observation, because it contains a great deal of truth in a little compass. He who would see it proved in detail may consult the Div. Leg. of Moses, B. II.

The vulgar Pagans delighted in worrying the Christians, from the attachment they had to the pageantry and debauchery of the pagan rites. —ibid. p. 201.

Intolerance was of the essence of the Magian system: and the flames of persecution soon reached the Jews and Christians. Agathias. ii. 164. D'Herbelot. mot, Ardfchir. Mosheim on Cudworth. i. 249. 327.

Of the Persecutions in Persia, see Mosheim, H.E. p. 152. 198.

The
The Persian martyrlogy. Rome, 1748. 2 £.
Varanes, anno 421. Socrat. vii. 20.

Of the Diocletianean persecution, or rather that of Maximian Galerius, See Euseb. H. E. vii. Laß. M. PP. Mosheim. sec. iv. Tillemont. tom. V.
J. Lipsius, saturn. I. c. 12. (Opp. t. iii. p. 903.) speaking of the amphitheatres: mention, if non unus aliquis mensis Europæ flétit vicenis capitum millibus aut tricenis. heu mores!
Is it to be supposed that a people so sanguinary in their diversions, at the expence of the lives of their own slaves and citizens, should be sparing of the obnoxious and devoted lives of the Christians?

Cyprianus: Epist. LXXVI. A. 257. Exemplum vestrum fecuta multiplex plebis portio, confessa est vobiscum pariter, et pariter coronata est; connexa vobis vinculo fortissimæ caritatis, et a praepotitis suis nec carcere nec metallo separata.
Cujus numero nec Virgines defunt, quibus ad sexagenarium fruéstum centenus accessit, quasque ad coelestem coronam gloria geminata provexit.
In puerris quoque virtus major ætate, annos suos confessionis laude transcendent, ut martyrii vestri beatum gregem et sexus et ætas omnis ornaret.
Qui
DISCOURSE VIII. 125

Qui nunc vobis, dilectissimi fratres, conscientiae vietrices vigor? quae sublimitas animi? quae in fenu exultantia? qui triumphus in pectore?

PAGE 103.

Of the Decian persecution, Dionysius Bp. of Alex. in Euseb. H. E. VI. 39-42.

After a profound peace of xiii years, ab A. 218. ad A. 230. Maximin persecuted such of the Bishops and Presbyters as had been connected with the family of the virtuous Emperor Alexander.

Vale-
Valerian's persecution. Euseb. VII. 10. from Dionysius of Alex. This worthy prelate, in his conference with the praefect Æmilianus, lays open the principal Cause of the Persecutions: p. 335. ἡμεῖς τον ἐνα Σεον καὶ δημιουργον των ἁπαντων—σεθομεν. Αἱμιλιανος εἰπε—τις γαρ ὡμας καλυει κυ τουλιν, εἰπε Σεος, μεία των καλα φυτων Σεων προσκυνειν; Σεος γαρ σεθειν εκελευσθης, και Σεος ους ταυτες ισας. Αἰμιλιανος απεκρισασθαι ἡμεῖς αυτενε έτερον προσκυνουμεν κ.τ.λ. The persecutions were among the principal Causes of the wide diffusion of the Gospel. The persecuted Bishops and Presbyters driven into exile or captivity converted the rude and barbarous people with whom they sojourned. Thus, Dionysius made the deserts of Egypt to blossom as the rose: τὸ τε πρόσον δι ἡμῶν ὁ λόγος επεσπαρην, κ.τ.λ.

Concerning the paucity of martyrs, we may assent to the system of Dodwell properly qualified, during that long period of 11 years from Nerva to Decius, when the persecutions were local and fluctuating. But what idea can reach the ferocity of that æra, so emphatically styled the æra of Martyrs, when Diocletian slaughtered 17000 Christians within 30 days: and when in Egypt only, were slain 144,000, and 700,000 exiled! when as Sulpitius Severus expresseth it, Omnis fere sacro Martyrum cruore Orbis Orbis infestus est. See Euseb. viii. 1—17. and Laëntant. de MM. PP. who were eye-witnesses; and Daubuz. on Rev. vi. 9. Seal v. S. Basnage. i. 807. Ann. xcvii. n. 6.—moderates between Dodwell and Ruinart with a fair and probable decision.

In the last persecutions, Cruelty was ingenious in every mode of torture that was not mortal.

Laëntantius, Div. Inft. V. 11. Quis Caucasus, quæ India, quæ Hyrcania, tam immanes, tam sanguinarias unquam Bestias aluit? Speaking of Diocletian; nemo hujus tantæ belluae immanitatem potest pro merito describere, quæ uno loco recubans, tamen per totum orbem dentibus ferreis sæviit. Ausi, præ nimia timidity, plus ausi sunt, quam jubebatur; alii suo proprio adversus justos odio; quidam naturali mentis feritate; nonnulli ut placerent; et hoc officio viam sibi ad altiora munirent. Aliqui ad occiduntem præcipites extiterunt, sicut unus in Phrygia, qui universum populum cum ipso pariter conventiculo concremavit. Sed hic quanto sævior, tanto clementior inventur. Illud vero pessimum genus est, cui Clementiae species falla blanditur: ille gravior, ille sævior est carnifex, qui neminem statuit occidere. — Contendunt igitur ut vincant, et exquisitos dolores corporibus immittunt, et nihil aliud devitant, quam ut ne torti moriantur.—Quin etiam sceleratissimi homicidæ contra pios jura impia condiderunt. Nam et constitutiones sacrilegæ, et disputationes jurisprudentium leguntur; injustæ. Domitius de officio Proconsulis libro septimo rescripta Principum nefaria collegit, ut doceret, quibus poenis affici oporteret eos, qui se cuttores Dei confiterentur.

Euseb. de vit. Const. i. 58. et orat. in laudem Const. c. 7. These pieces of Eusebius, together with his Ecclesiastical History present us with the noblest subject, ever treated by any uninspired Historian: the complete establishment of Christianity. The historian himself, learned as he was, did not conceive the greatness of his subject: the effect of his work, like that of an Epic Poem, results from the gradual tendency of all its parts to produce so singular and so great an event, as the conversion of the Roman Empire.
DISCOURSE IX.

PROPHECIES
OF THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

PSALM II.

8. Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, And the uttermost parts of the earth for possession.

At the time of this predictive promise, there was no apparent probability, that any of the idolatrous nations should renounce their superstitions, and adore the God of Israel. It was no less improbable, that the kingdom of David, though extended by his victorious arms from the Nile to the Euphrates, should in a political sense become universal. So that the expression, I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, can relate only to a religious empire, and the utmost parts of the earth for thy possession, to the universality of that Religion.

With
With respect to civil and political dominion, from the commencement of the Hebrew monarchy to its extinction, it was providentially so constituted, as to exclude an undefined extent of territory. David, because he adhered strictly to the fundamental laws of the Theocracy, was signally blessed with a far greater extent of dominion, than any of his successors: but in his own reign, the neighbouring monarchies, of Egypt to the South, of Assyria to the North, were making rapid advances to their destined greatness; not to insist on the maritime states of Tyre and Palestine, who held the sovranity of the sea, before Carthage existed. These kingdoms were insurmountable barriers to the utmost power of the Jews, when most warlike and united; as they were under David, who appears to have had the sublimest martial genius of all the ancient Kings, both by establishing a numerous militia, and by first instituting military orders. But as our antagonists are more inclined to depreciate than over-estimate the power of the Jewish State, they will concur with us, that that conquest and extensive territory was neither the principle nor the strength of that government.

As an universal Empire was not the object of the Jewish polity, still less was an universal Religion. In both respects their national peculiarity was wonderfully characterized:

Lo, the people shall dwell alone,
And shall not be reckoned among the nations.

and the solution of the singular problem we are about to investigate will prove the completion of another oracle: I shall see him, but not now: I shall behold him, but not nigh. There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a scepter shall rise out of Israel: where, as in the 11th Psalm, the conquests of David are primarily intended: but in the nobler sense, the Scepter denotes the King of Kings, and the hieroglyphic of a Star prefigures a God.

* Numb. xxiii. 9. xxiv. 17.

* Philo, who writes so divinely of the Logos, has rightly interpreted this oracle: Ἐξελευθέρων τοις Αβραμος εὖ ὑμων, καὶ εὐπροφήτων συνανενευτοὶ τον τοῦτο Βασιλεια καθ’ ἐκαστήν ὑμᾶς ὑφις ὑψω ἁθησθαι, de vita Mosis, lib. I. p. 440.
PROFESSING the conquered nations was not the design of the theocracy; and king David, whose glory it was to adhere to its maxims, never attempted it. We never read, that he availed himself of his victories, to induce a change of Religion among the tributary nations. The mode of those ages was, not proselytism, but intercommunity; as God's people often exemplified to their cost, the associating false gods with the true, being the essence of their sin, and the cause of their punishment. Yet the predictions are full of this exalted subject, so dissimilar from the very genius of Judaism*; but the distinguishing character of another revelation in a distant age: a revelation, unlimited as the clemency of God, and which, in due time, will open and extend the Jewish peculiarity to all the nations of the earth.

* See Mr. Mede's diatribæ, iii. xi. Jos. B. J. vi. 6. μὴ δὲν ἀλλοφυλον εἴδος τού ἀγίου παρεῖναι. This was inscribed on the μεσολογιον, to which St. Paul alludes, Ephes. ii. 14. The Gentile's Court seems to have been proper to the Second Temple, the Gentiles in the First worshipping without at the Temple-door in the holy mountain only. Mede. p. 46. who cites Isai. lvi. 6, 7. and amends the version of Mark xi. 17. My House shall he called a House of Prayer to all the Nations.
Let us apply our attention to the steps and progress of the national conversions, which form so pleasing and interesting a part of the prosperous fortunes of the Christian Church.

Christ himself was not sent but to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and the chief scene of his ministry was the northern province of Galilee, which sat in darkness, neglected and despised by the Jewish teachers. From Galilee Christ, in less than 14 years, with wonderful diligence, diffused the Gospel over all the Holy Land: and closed his glorious labours with the Reformation of Religion in the capital City. Thus Jerusalem, the city of the Great King, the favoured seat and throne of the theocracy, was first illumined by the Sun of Righteousness, which beaming from the East, hath diffused its lustre beyond the Atlantic Ocean. It was expressly predicted, that out of Zion should go forth the Law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem: and, by our inspired Psalmist, yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Sion. The kingdom of David was firmly established by his conquest of the Jebusites, when he made their strong fortress on Mount Sion, the seat of his royal residence, garrisoned with his bravest troops and Worthies. With a religious correspondence to these martial images, the peaceful kingdom of Christ began from Jerusalem, and was from thence extended to other nations. From thence as from a center, the Apostles began their preaching: from thence, their lines went out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world, which is elegantly adapted to this sense by St. Paul. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. But I say, have they not heard? Verily, their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world.

This was literally verified, first viva voce, and then more amply and durably by the ancient Translations of the Holy Scriptures, many of which are still extant: the Oriental versions; the Chaldee, the Syriac, Arabic,

5 2 Sam. v. 7. * Psalm xix. 4. Rom. x. 17, 18. Arme-
Armenian, Malabaric: the Septuagint and other Greek translations: the old Italic, St. Jerome's, and the Vulgate, besides the modern Latin Versions: and in all the Western Tongues now spoken: and of the New Testament, the ancient versions, Italic, Vulgate, Syriac, Armenian, Coptic, Ethiopian, Arabic, Persian, Gothic: all which attest the incorruption of our Sacred Writings, and the care of Divine Providence for the Conversion of the World. Probably no method of diffusing the sacred light of the Gospel would now be more successful, than editions of the New Testament in the Eastern and other tongues, so as to be accessible to all who have any curiosity to know the Christian Religion.

The Apostles formed the first and best Church at Jerusalem, which continued steadfast in their doctrine, and fellowship, in breaking of bread, and in prayers. They next enlightened Samaria, and the confines of Syria, Egypt, and Ethiopia: the Morians' land stretched out her hands unto God. Their Acts within a period of xl years, include a geographical description of the Roman Empire. St. Paul in particular extended his progress from Jerusalem to Illyricum, and probably visited this happy island.

Yet that the glory of this great work might reflect all its lustre on the cause, not on the instruments; when Christ ascended to heaven, he received gifts for men, and, by the mission of the Holy Spirit, he distributed those gifts to all the nations of the Roman world, who are named in their geographical order; in the higher Asia, the Parthians, Medes, and Elamites, and inhabitants of Mesopotamia: in Asia minor, the Cappadocians, Lydians, the Pontic and Asian Provinces, Phrygia and Pamphylia: the Egyptians and Libyans, including the whole African continent: the Romans, or the continent of Europe: the Cretans: and the free tribes of Arabia. The Christian converts from these several nations diffused

---

9 Rom. xv. 19. 10 Clem. ad Cor. i. 5.
* Λουδα for Ιουδαία, according to Mr. Bryant's emendation. Obs. p. 310.
the sacred flame, they had caught at Jerusalem. All Church-history attests the completion of those exact and glorious prophecies; The kings of Tarshis and of the isles shall give presents, The kings of Arabia and Saba shall bring gifts. The first clause denotes the Western progress of the Gospel, to the islands and coasts of the Mediterranean; the second, the flourishing state of the Eastern Churches. The future extension and universality of the Gospel is also predicted in that delicious poem: He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth; All kings shall fall down before him, all nations shall serve him. And, to express from how small beginnings this Religion should extend itself, 'there shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains: it shall produce a waving harvest, whose fruit shall shake like Lebanon; and flourish every where in peopled cities, like the grass, that spontaneously clothes the earth.'

12 Psalm lxxii. 8. 11. 16.
There shall be an handful of corn in the Earth—
His fruit shall shake like Lebanon: elegantly denoting, by the powers of vegetation, the growth of the Church, to its present extent and future immensity. It is in the literal sense applicable to those proselytes whom the fame and felicity of the reign of Solomon brought into the Jewish Temple: of whom 153,600 are mentioned, as employed in that magnificent structure \(13\). an apt and expressive emblem of the far more numerous and perpetual augmentation of the Christian Church; which is here described in terms very similar to those of Isaiah, ii. 1.

In the last days the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it.

This lxxiii Psalm, the last of the Second Book, was written by David on the inauguration of Solomon. It is a most

\[2\] Chron. ii. 17. elegant elegant description of a just and peaceful government; a literal preface of the felicity of those Times. But if we attentively compare this Psalm with the history of that age, we find a striking diversity between them. The reign of Solomon was distinguished by opulence and power; and the weighty scepter of the house of David was never more felt, than in the hands of this able and politic Prince; and by his apostacy from the sole worship of God, the glories of his reign were reversed. Examine the scope of this prophetic Psalm, and you will find the characters of a very different administration from that of Solomon: an administration distinguished, not by riches, splendour and magnificence, but by equity and mildness, in the protection of the poor and of the great body of mankind, in the universality and eternity of a spiritual dominion:

4. He shall judge the poor of the people,
He shall save the children of the needy,
And shall break in pieces the oppressor.

5. They
DISCOURSE IX.

5. They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure.
14. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence.

The attentive Reader will find, that the words here used, the poor, the needy, the afflicted, are much employed to express moral and religious qualities: that Poverty of Spirit, which Christ pronounces Blessed, because in believing the Gospel we resign the pride of reason and the pride of virtue; and, feeling our natural destitution and inability, we seek salvation in our professed subjection to Him, who alone is mighty to save. The universality of this empire is described in strains abundantly too magnificent for the reign of Solomon, to which the tribes of Arabia, and perhaps the isle of Cyprus, might become tributary.

10. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents;
And the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.
8. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean,
And from the river unto the ends of the earth, from the Euphrates to the Nile.

This will suffice for the amplitude of the kingdom of Solomon, in its utmost extent; but a far greater Kingdom is described in the sequel:

11. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him,
All nations shall serve him.

which is so disproportioned to the greatest king of Israel, that it would have been ill applied to the kings of Assyria or Babylon, when flushed with conquest, and in all the pride of despotism. But it perfectly corresponds to what all the Prophets have foretold of that Divine King,

17. Whose name shall endure for ever:
His name shall be continued as long as the Sun:
And men shall be blessed in him;
All nations shall call him blessed.

Such
Such strains as these, addressed to any temporal and local Prince would be deemed too extravagant either for Truth or fiction; and are inexplicable, unless we admit a prophetic sense in this beautiful composition, which evidently harmonizes with those predictions 14, which describe Christianity in its most perfect state on earth.

The sedulity of the Apostles and first Evangelists was the result of a firm persuasion and ardent love of the truth of the Gospel. This persuasion was founded on the evidence of their senses: they declared that which they had heard and seen, which they had accurately inspected, and their hands had handled of the word of life 15: and their love of Christ was the effect of their conviction and their integrity. Supported by miracles, undaunted by opposition, unawed by punishments, they undertook and they succeeded in the conversion of the world. Thus, the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, was now made manifest; and by the 15 1 John i. 1—3.

Discourse IX.

The Scriptures of the Prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of Faith. The Scriptures of the Prophets to which the Apostle here refers us, are copious and explicite on this topic. Those of Isaiah are most illustrious. The Conversion of the Gentiles is often predicted under a dispensation, the essence of which was peculiarity and exclusion, with an emphasis, which should convince every reasonable man, that the Divine Providence planned the Christian Religion as the result and end of the Jewish system.

XLIX.6. It is a light thing, that thou shouldest be my servant
To raise up the tribes of Jacob,
And to restore the preserved of Israel:
I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles,
That thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7. Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One,

Rom. xvi. 25, 26.
To him, whom man despiseth,
To him, whom the nation abhorreth,
To a servant of Rulers *;
Kings shall see and arise, Princes also shall worship,
Because of the Lord that is faithful,
And the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

Isaiah not only predicts the universality of the Christian Religion, but specifies the manner in which it will be effected: both by the revival of the ancient and extinct Churches, and by the new conversions of Jews and

* See Vitringa's splendid comment, p. 575—578.
Dr. Kennicott, in his division of the stiches places Rulers in connection with kings. His MSS. 72. 93. 159. read משלי ומלונים: which gives this improvement of our translation;

Rulers and Kings shall see,
Princes shall arise and worship.

Le Clerc well afferts the prediction of Christ, Jer.xxiii. against Grotius's misapplication of it to Zerubbabel. I cannot omit Le Clerc's ingenious interpretation of י. 8, e terrâ septentrionali:] semen domus Israelis, spirituale nempe.—Gentiles, majore multo numero e septentriona-libus Europæ praefertim oris ad Religionem Christianam adducti sunt.

Gentiles.
D I S C O U R S E I X.

Gentiles. It shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues—nations, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles 17. In his lxth chapter, the conversion of Asia 18, of Europe 19, and of the less explored parts of the world 20, is predicted in a language so magnificent, as to affect us with those mixed emotions so well expressed by an ancient poet:

His tibi me rebus, quædam divina voluptas Percipit atque horror, quod sic natura tua vi Tam manifesta patet ex omni parte resecta.

Lucretius III. 30.

Or in the still nobler style of our great prophet;

y. 5. Then thou shalt see, and flow together; And thine heart shall fear and be enlarged; Because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, The forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

17 lxvi. 19, 20. 18 y. 6, 7. 19 y. 9. 20 y. 10.

Such
Such were the views of Divine Providence, that the most contrary causes all conspired to augment the glories of the Gospel. Persecution dispersed and scattered its pastors and their flocks; and formed new churches in the most inhospitable deserts. When the Churches had rest, they were edified, and walking in the fear of the Lord, and in the comforts of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.

The army of the great Constantine, which gained the decisive victory over Maxentius, was composed of the barbarous nations; Germans, Britons, Celts. If these troops

* Zosimus. lib. II. p. 86. 'Ο de Κωνσταντίνος — συναγωγά

The Army of Maxentius was still greater, amounting to 170 thousand foot and 18 thousand horse.

From that year, eccxii. so auspicious to Christianity, our Religion pervaded all the Roman Empire to the Barbarians on all its frontiers.

This victory was foretold, Rev. xii. 9. and Constantine had a picture of it with the apocalyptic emblems. Euseb. vita Const. III. 3.

were spectators of the luminous Cross, whether a solar halo, or a miraculous sign, so critically timed, as to decide the Emperor's faith and the establishment of Christianity, as Eusebius assures us they were: "so providential an interposition not only decided the event of that important day, but also gave the barbarian conquerors such favourable impressions of the Christian Religion, as nothing but the prosperous events of war could have impressed on those martial Nations.

Our admiration of these Conversions is enhanced, when we reflect that it was not only in the schools of literature and amidst the arts of peace, not only in refined Society, under the controlling influence of the Roman laws, which so long with unavailing rigour opposed the extension of the Christian name—but among the barbarous nations, who delight in war, the glad voice of the Gospel was heard with rapture, and with permanent effects. Amid the ranks of

"Vit. Const. I. 28."

imbattled
imbattled armies, the fierce barbarian suspended the war, to hear the soothing doctrines of the Evangelist and the Missionary. The sacred flame spread through the warlike tribes of the North and South, Goths, Vandals, Heruli, with an energy that may well be deemed miraculous. It touched the barbarous Chiefs, who imparted it to their armies: their martial ardour yielded to the powerful persuasion; their bosoms softened at the auspicious found; they caught the maxims of Truth and Justice; they venerated the Religion that realized their hopes and fears; they renounced their barbarous deities, the consecrated Spear, the hallowed Forest, the dreams of old fanaticism: they exchanged their fordid immortality.

* The heroes, (says the Edda, Fab. 31, 33, 34, 35.) who are received into the palace of Odin have every day the pleasure of arming themselves, of passing in review, of ranging themselves in order of battle, and of cutting one another in pieces: but as soon as the hour of repast approaches, they return on horseback to the hall of Odin and eat the flesh of the boar Scrimner: their beverage is beer and mead: their cups are the skulls of enemies: Odin alone drinks wine, &c.

On the Celtic Immortality, see Dr. Percy's notes on Fable 33, p. 164—181.
DISCOURSE IX.

and contempt of death, for the rational the Christian Faith of Eternal Life, angelic and divine. So rapid was the change from their ancient Superstitions (some of which are recorded by Antiquaries, and others are still retained in vulgar customs) as to verify those admiring strains: shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

The Revolutions in the Roman Empire in the 5th and 6th Centuries were favourable to the conversion of the Barbarians. If, says Orosius, vii.41. for this cause only, the Barbarians were permitted to invade the Empire, that the Eastern and the Western Churches, might be every where replete with Huns and Suevi, Vandals and Burgundians, and with innumerable converts to the faith of Christ; we have abundant reason to extol the mercies of God.

The Gothic tribes of Moesia and Thrace were converted by Christian captives taken 23 Ifai. lxvi. 8.

in their incursions. Ulphilas the descendant of those captives gave them a translation of the Holy Scriptures; another powerful mean of conversion. The intrepidity of the Christian Martyrs contributed much to their success, among nations enthusiastically enamoured of their passive fortitude. Wherever the Christian Religion made its way, it carried with it that sacred charm of civil freedom and humanity, of comfort to the evils of that imperfect state of society, above all, the persuasive consolations of peace of conscience and of peace with God, which made it every where gladly received even when it led its votaries to martyrdom. And here I cannot suppress an opinion which perhaps is better founded than I can ascertain; that very much of that freedom and equity, which we still admire in the old Celtic constitutions, whether Gothic or Saxon; and which from them have been transmitted to our times and nation; were either the original result, or the improved culture, of the Gospel charity. This is certain, that the barbarous invaders, who parcelled out the Roman Empire Empire in the Sixth Century, and laid the foundations of the modern Kingdoms; brought with them a greater degree of true heroifm, of legislation, justice, honour, than they found among the degenerate Romans*. Whatever evils of the barbarous ages we despise or deprecate, we may rationally account for, from the prevalence of anti-christianifm grafted on their ancient superflitions, and a false philosophy. But we may derive from their conversion those generous virtues, which tempered arms with equity, and gave so beautiful models of a free and equal polity. Perhaps, from their conversion, blended with their warlike character, we may derive that fingular assemblage of feudal manners, which of

* Salvian, a writer of the very age of Revolutions, acquaints us with the excellent effects of the Christian Religion on the piety and morals of the Vandals. p. 157—160. and of the Goths. p. 162. lib. VII. de Gub. Dei. Contrary to the custom of Conquerors, these Barbarians lost their own laws and religion, fondly affecting the Religion, Laws and Language and the very name of Romans.

Out of the Conversions of the Germans, Saxons, Swedes, and others to the then Church of Rome, hath arisen the Reformed Church, which preserves the true worship of God. Daubuz. on Rev. xii. 16. p. 549.
late have exercised so much ingenuity to investigate; that honour of Chastity, that generosity to the vanquished, that just division of the spoils of war, that grateful attachment to their Chiefs, and popular spirit of freedom, which still charm us, amidst the barbarism of the times, with virtues before unknown to the most polished nations. One circumstance was singular and discriminating: Zeal for Religion was conspicuous among their romantic virtues: this passion was not of gentile growth, which produced nothing better than a barbarous fanaticism, but was the genuine effect of Christianity.

As the result of the foregoing observations, let us reflect on the conclusions that follow from the true interpretation of this prophetic Psalm.

Be wise now therefore, O ye Kings,
Be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

In the primary and historical sense, the tributary Princes are injoined to pay their homage to the theocracy, administered in the person of King David as God's viceroy;
their service being claimed by Jehovah as paramount:

Serve the Lord with fear—

But the singularity of the subsequent expression, Kifs the son, is an argument, that the secondary or religious sense was principal in the ideas of Inspiration. In the 7th verse, thou art my Son, is no otherwise applicable to David, than as God's viceroy: but in its theological sense, it is so apposite to the Son of God, as to be a proof of his deity. In the 12th verse, the expression is still more appropriate: Kifs the Son. The peculiar use of a Chaldaic word intimates a singular and exclusive idea of filiation. Abraham, a Chaldean, the great ancestor of the people of God, probably induced some words of his national and domestic language into the religious speech of his descendents. The import of this title is admirably expressed in Isaiah. Behold my servant whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth. I have put my spirit upon him, he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles. He נָשַׁקְו בַּר בֶּן נָחָה

shall shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the Earth, and the isles shall wait for his law. Nothing can be more apposite and sublime, than the application of these texts to the spiritual kingdom of Christ. Monarchs are commanded to reverence and obey him. It is their wisdom and their security to kiss the Son, to rule their subjects by his maxims, and by a power delegated from him, who is the King of Kings. The effect indeed, marvellous as it is, hath followed the divine prediction.

The Imperial government, after a long and unavailing persecution of Christianity, at length established it in the East and West as the Religion of that extended Empire. From them, the barbarous Princes, and since, all the kings of Europe, have gloried in becoming its Nursing Fathers, and in receiving from it their most splendid titles.

25 נָבָד xlii. 1. cited by St. Matthew, xii. 18.
26 Ifai. xlix. 23.

The Reformed Churches are, compared to the Idolatrous Churches, Western and Oriental, Twelve Parts in Forty-Two: or as One to Three and an Half. Daubuz, on Rev. xi. 2. p. 501.

The
The Christian Religion was immediately protected by Divine Providence. This proposition does not derive its proof merely from its success, but from its prevalence without adequate human means. All effects are virtually included in their causes. A Religion, which succeeds by its simplicity and internal excellence, and which disclaims all ways of making Converts but persuasion, has a clear credential of Truth and Divinity, which discriminates it from all imposture. This position is illustrated by a remarkable contrast, which the history of the Church affords us, as a complete exemplification of Religious Imposture: I mean the establishment of Islamism* or the Religion of Mohammed. This imposture was invented by fraud and enthusiasm, and supported by a military force. Mohammed and his coadjutors were, by means of their enthusiasm, the dupes of their own imposture: fingebant simul credebantque.

* I am precluded from contrasting the propagation of Christianity in its causes and effects to the success of Mohammed in spreading his imposture, by the learned and eloquent and well reasoned Sermons before the University of Oxford, by Joseph White, B.D. 1785: where the subject is placed in the clearest and most convincing point of view.

Europe, in the barbarous ages of Popish policy, poured forth her myriads, to recover the holy land, and to convert the Infidels. But the effect of those expeditions was abortive; it being contrary to the genius of the Religion to extend itself by offensive arms and religious wars. The divine providence shone forth conspicuous and without a cloud, in giving that success to the artless preaching of an holy and interior doctrine, which was denied to the combined power, wealth, and armies, to the spirit of chivalry, and thirst of honour in the European Princes, actuated by the profound policy of the papal cabinet, in the view of weakening the Civil power in Europe, and of subjugating the Greek Church and Empire to the authority of the Popes.

Universality is the proper character, which discriminates a divine Religion from 27 See Daubuz. on the 2d and 3d Phials, and on the Epiphonema: Rev, xvi.

the inventions of men. God, as the common parent and sovereign, beholds all men with an impartial and paternal love. The Majesty of God, as well as the whole system of Revealed Religion evinces, that all his proceedings with man are general and universal, including the whole species. Redemption by his Son, and sanctification by his Spirit, are as unlimited as the bounties of his Providence. The divine goodness, so far from confining the blessings of Redemption to a few favoured Christians, hath in a considerable degree extended them to all mankind. The Lamb slain from the foundation of the world hath merited salvation for all virtuous men; whom he hath redeemed to God by his blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation. He is the Saviour of all men, especially of them that believe. He is not willing, that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance. It is a calumny on the Christian Religion, to suppose, that it condemns virtuous heathens. They and all are saved by the universal extent of Christ's expiation. His merciful Religion condemns none but the incurably vicious, the infidel, and the apostate, who violate the law written on their hearts, and reject with open eyes the only name under heaven by which men can be saved. That virtue which made a Socrates, a Cicero, an Aurelius, in their several degrees of proficiency acceptable to God, was as much the gift of the Holy Spirit, and they are as much interested in the Redemption by Christ, as are professed Christians. In this sense the Christian Religion is at present and ever hath been Universal.

With respect to the external knowledge of his Revealed Will, God indeed imparts it arbitrarily. As he distributes the climates of the Earth to its different inhabitants, from the flaming equator to the frozen poles: with a similar inequality, he affords them a greater or less degree of divine illumination. About a sixth part, and that the most civilized part of this globe, professes the Religion of Jesus Christ: these are his Moral instruments in the conversion of the rest.
There is an unexampled dignity in that command of Christ to his Apostles: Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature ³¹. And the performance corresponds to the command and promise. The Gospel was preached in every nation: and St. Paul speaks in a style that the most victorious of Rome's heroes could not exceed; that he had disseminated the Christian Religion from Jerusalem to Illyricum.

Christ himself predicted, that his Religion should be generally published before the excision of Jerusalem. This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, that I am Christ, and then shall the end of the Jewish polity come ³².

St. Paul with his usual precision describes at once the doctrine and surprizing success of it. Since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of your love to all the saints; for the hope which is laid up for you in heaven; whereof ye heard before in the word of the ³³

---

TRUTH
TRUTH of the Gospel, which is come unto you, as it is in all the world. It is not necessary to restrain this expression to the Roman world: the Apostle was commissioned both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians: and there was not any habitable part of the world then known, without some Christians. This he expresseth with sufficient clearness, If ye continue in the Faith, and be not moved away from the Hope of the Gospel, which was preached to every creature which is under heaven. The same observation is still more applicable to the present state of the world, and the Gospel, as a seed-plant, is now actually sown in all lands.

The times of Constantine, of Justinian, and of Charlemagne, were propitious to the extension of Christianity. And I saw, and lo, a Lamb standing upon Mount Sion, and with him an hundred and forty-four thousand, the phalanx of the Christian converts, having his name and the name of his Father written upon their foreheads. St. John applies this emblem to the first establishment of the Church under Constantine.

83 Coloss. i. 4.

I saw another angel, fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel, to preach unto them, that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people 35. This prophecy relates to the middle ages, and the noble exertions under the New Empire, both in checking image-worship, and propagating the Gospel, especially among the Northern Nations. The Reformation, and the discovery of the new world, were farther steps towards universality. When the antichristian Church shall come to an end, then pure and genuine Christianity will display its native lustre, and shine forth on all the world: agreeable to that prophecy, And the seventh Angel founded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever 36.

35 Comp. Rev. vii. 4. and xiv. 6. 36 Rev. xi. 15.
APPENDIX
TO THE NINTH DISCOURSE.

A General View of the Progress of the Christian Religion: extracted from the accurate Treatise of the most learned Fabricius; Salutaris Lux Evangelii toti Orbi per divinam Gratiam exoriens. Hamb. 1731. 4.

II. Jewish, Heathen, Christian Testimonies, of the early progress and success of the Gospel. Tacitus, XV. 44. non modo per Judæam, sed per urbem etiam, multitudo ingens. Clemens R. de Paulo Apostolo, § 5. δικαίους εν δίδαξας ἵλον τοῦ κοσμοῦ, καὶ επὶ το τέρμα δισεως ἐλθὼν.

III. Conversion of the Jews and Samaritans. Nazarenes, a general name of Christians, was more confined to the Jewish converts, who retained the ritual of Moses. Acts xv.

IV.
IV. Conversion of the Gentiles, principally by St. Paul; from his own miraculous conversion, A. D. 35, he went into Arabia, to Damascus, to Jerusalem, to Caesarea, to Cilicia, and Tarsus, to Antioch, Cyprus, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Macedonia; to Athens, Corinth, Ephesus; Phrygia and Galatia; Greece, Asia; Rhodes, Patara, Tyre, Ptolemais; Jerusalem; and to Rome, A. D. 61. See Tillemont's Life of St. Paul. Mem. I. 2. The Hellenists were Gentile converts: Acts xi. 18. Fabricius gives eight several opinions concerning them.

VI. Persecutions and Calumnies, by which the Jews and Samaritans attempted to impede the Gospel. Jerusalem taken, and deserted. The Jews in vain attempted to rebuild the Temple, under Hadrian, Constantine, and Julian.

VII. Gentile Persecutions, for 111 Centuries, under Nero, A. 64; Domitian, A. 93; Trajan, A. 104; Hadrian, A. 125; M. Aurelius, A. 151; L 2. Severus, Severus, A. 197; Maximin, A. 235; Decius, A. 250; Valerian, A. 257; Aurelian, A. 272; Numerian, A. 283; Diocletian and Maximian, and Licinius, A. 303—313.

VIII. Philosophers and Heretics, who opposed the Christian Religion. Sadducees, Epicureans, Stoics, False Apostles: Tribes of heretics, in the first century, of whom Philastrius, edit. 1721. 8. still more numerous in the second century; and more skilful and dangerous, in the third. These intestine disorders would have ruined the credit of any Religion, not of divine original.

Celsus, Lucian, Theolthenes, Porphyry, two anonymous writers in Bithynia (Lačt. V. 2.) Hierocles, Demetrianus, Caecilius, Julian, Ammonius, Proclus, wrote against the Christian Religion.

IX. The sincerity, industry, and success of the Apostles concurred with the evidence of Miracles, and Prophecy, with catechetical instruction, and preaching, and the Apologies for Christianity, to disseminate the Gospel.

X. The Lives and Manners of the Primitive Christians. Of the German treatise of G. Arnold, 1700 f. and a summary of its contents, see Fabricius, bricius, p. 197—201. The Christians were good and quiet subjects to Government: όυδὲν γὰς σασεως εργον επιδεξαὶ χριστιανων δ' Κελσος, ἵ δὲ ὑμονοσυλες αὑτῳ δυναστα. Orig. III. p. 115.

XI. Martyrs. Prudentius, Π. Σ. χ'. 85.

Nec furor quisquam sine laude nostrum Cessit, aut clari vacuus cruoris;
Martyrum semper numerus sub omni Grandine crevit.

XII. Christian Emperors. Tiberius, Domitian, Trajan, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, M. Aurelius, Severus, Julia Mamæa and her son Alexander, Philip and Severa, Gallienus, had occasionally favoured and protected the Christians. The corruption of manners, that preceded the storm of Diocletian, is described by Eusebius, H. E. VIII. 1.

A. 311. Galerius, Constantine, and Licinius published an Edict in their favour. Euf. VIII. 17. which was followed by others of Maximin. IX. 1. 9, 10. and of Licinius, X. 5. Constantine favoured the Christians, without adopting their Creed. He has the glory of establishing Christianity as the Religion of the Roman Empire. His conversion was A. 312. and during a fortunate reign of 30 years, A. 306—337, he extended Religion, with and beyond his victories and conquests.
XIII. Imperial Edicts for the Christian Religion; against idolatry, temples, sacrifices, gladiators; Constantine abolished the capital punishment of the Cross, Lips. de Cruce, III. 14. against Judaism; against the errors and abuses which had impaired the discipline of the Church.

Constantine committed the administration of the Roman Empire to Four praetorian præfects. On this division was formed the Ecclesiastical Government. 1. Under the præfect of the East, were five dioceses; the East, 15 provinces: Egypt, 6: Asia, 10: Pontus, 10: Thrace, 6. II. Under the præfect of Illyricum, three dioceses, Macedonia, 6 provinces: Illyricum, 6: Dacia, 5. III. under the præfect of Italy, two dioceses, Italy, 17 provinces: Africa, 6 provinces. IV. Under the præfect of Gaul, three dioceses, Spain, 7 provinces: France, 17: Britain, 5.

Of the extent of the Church, we may form some idea, from the Subscriptions of 307 Eastern Bishops to the Council of Nice. 'Hæc de Constantino, qui primus veneranda Christia-norum fide Romanum munivit imperium, principe prudente, felici, forti, humano, et, quamquam passus aliquid et ipse humani fit quandoque, tamen divinitus deleto ad res maximas gerendas, et Christianis nunquam fine grata venera-tione nominando.' p. 294.
XIV. Julian's persecution, by dispersing the Confessors, enlarged the bounds of the Church. Julian says, Epift. 51. that the Christians were equal in number to the Gentiles. Jovian in a few months reversed all that Julian had done in behalf of paganism. All the Eastern Churches were subject to the four Patriarchs, of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. Car. a S. Paulo, 1707. f. Bingham. B. IX.

XV. Italy. Gunther. Ligurini l. VI. 625.

—Romanus tempore prisco
Pauper erat præfus; regali munere crevit.
Nec tamen ut fasces, et regni jura Latini
Veldare præfumat, vel cuiquam tollere possit.

By the suburban Churches, in Rufinus, H. E. I. 6. some understand the territory of the præfect of Rome, 100 miles from the city. Others extend them to include a Patriarchal power over all the Western Churches: or a Metropolitan power over the x Provinces of Italy which were under the Vicar of Rome. F. Spanheim. Opp. II. p. 439.

Of the barbarians who infested Italy, from the fourth century, the Goths, Herulians, Lombards, all became converts to Christianity.

The Saracens conquered the Goths, A. 711, and were expelled from Spain, A. 1491. 1570. 1610.

PORTUGAL. They deduce their conversion from the disciples of St. James. The Moors were expelled, A. 1112. Clement XI. gave them a Patriarch. A. 1716.

Ethelbert king of Kent gave the Missionaries leave to try their powers of persuasion: and when he himself became their convert, he left every every one at liberty, either to reject or follow his example; on this noble maxim, that the service of Christ should not be compulsive, but the voluntary effect of the excellence of the Gospel. Beda. H. E. I. 25, 26.

Scotland: Buchanan, b. IV. says, that Donald and his successors could not efface the ancient superstitious. And b. V. that Pope Celestine, from A. 423 to 431, opposing the Pelagian heresy in Britain, effectually the conversion of the native barbarians.

XIX. Germany. των ἐν Γερμανιας ἱδρυμενων έκκλησιων meminit Irenæus, I. 3. St. Bonifacius converted all the nations between the Rhine and the Weser, from A. 719 to 754, with great zeal for the Christian Religion, and still greater for the Papal Power. Mabillon. Ann. Bened. tom. II. Few of the Northern nations were converted before the age of Charlemagne. In the old franco-saxon Confession, is this form. 'Ego renuncio omnibus diaboli operibus et verbis, lucorum cultui, Wodano et saxonicò Otino, et omnibus spiritibus malis, qui horum confortes sunt.

Ad tuos fatus Scytha mitigatur,— Et Getae currunt, et uterque Dacus.

Of the veneration of the Goths for the church of St. Paul and St. Peter, Procop. Goth. II. 4. and c. 14, 15, of the conversion of the Heruli.

Of the Dacians and Bessi, on the Riphaean mountains, Paulinus, poem. 17.

Nam
DISCOURSE IX.

Nam simul terris animisque duri
Et suâ Beffi nive duriiores
Nunc oves facti, duce te; gregantur
Pacis in aulum.

XXII. DENMARK. Saxo Gramm. l. IX. p. 175, ascribes its conversion to King Harold, A. 826. under his successor Sueno II. the Christians were persecuted, A. 980, (totam religionis fîrpem ab radice convulsit) but afterwards protected till his death in 1048. Canute, monarch of six kingdoms, died A. 1048, laudato studio promotendæ Religionis Christianæ.

LAPLAND:
 xv. Lapland: A. 1160; and under Gustavus Ericson, Charles IX. Gustavus Adolphus, and Queen Christina. Schefer’s Lapland, Oxf. 1674.

XXIII. Russia: Constantine porphyrogb. (or Leontius Byz.) in the life of Basilius Macedo, c. 66. relates an incredible miracle, of the Gospels unburnt in a fierce flame, by which the Russians were converted in the 10th Century.

Bonifacius Camaldulensis, the Russian and Prussian Apostle, died A. 1008.

Aga, wife of George prince of Ruffia, professed the Christian Religion, A. 955. her nephew Woldemir was baptized A. 988, with twenty thousand Russians.

The author of the Life of Basilius, c. 65. 38, 39. relates the success of the Gospel in Bulgaria, A. 870. and in other pagan nations.

The Patzinacites were converted under Constantine monomachus, A. 1042.

Siberia was held by the Mohammedans, and from 1587, by the Russian Christians.

The Ostiaes received christianity so late as 1712, by the care of Philotheus archbishop of Siberia.
DISCOURSE IX.

Under the Russian Patriarch appointed 1588, were four metropolitan. The patriarchate was abolished A. 1699, and a new Church government formed by Peter the Great. Frid. Spanheim. Opp. II. 501. Buddeus. M. S. II. 165.

XXIV. The Prophecies relating to the propagation of the Gospel may be classified under four kinds: 1, relative to the universality of the Christian Religion, of which see ch. i. 2, respecting the enemies of the Church, heresies, and scandals. 3, of the safety and perpetuity of the Church. 4, Of removing the candlestick or light of the Gospel, from those who neglect or abuse it: instanced in Ephesus and the Asian churches, in Greece and Africa: occasioned by hostile armies, and idolatrous barbarians, chiefly by the Saracens and Mohammedans.

The Saracens under Abubeker, Omar, Othman, subdued Arabia, Syria, Persia, and Egypt; made inrodes into the Greek empire; and carried their victorious arms into Media, Chaldea, India, Tartary; from A. 714, held Spain for many ages; but were driven out of France in 726; infested Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Majorca, Crete; founded in Africa the kingdoms of Fez, Morocco, Morocco, and Algiers, Tunis and Tripoli; and became masters of Constantinople, May 29, 1453. The success of their Arms was attended with the propagation of Islamism. Mohammed's definition of War was 'dectatio pro via Dei.' and in the Koran, Sura viii. 39. 'Pugnate contra infideles.' He gave a Charter of protection to all Christians who should submit to him. The causes of his success, were 1. The doctrine of the Unity, in opposition to the Koranshites. 2. Suppressing all mention of the Jewish and Christian mysteries. 3. The factions, heresies, and idolatries of the Christians. 4. The dismembering the Roman Empire, the weakness of the Byzantine Empire, and the growing power of the Barbarous Nations. 5. Mohammed's military successes seconded by his enthusiasm. 6. The successes of Heraclius against the Persians opened a way to the Mohammedan conquest of Persia. 7. His impostures. 8. His armies. 9. Liberty of conscience. 10. Sensual gratifications. 11. Commerce. 12. Silencing all disputes about Religion. Demetr. Cantemir, de statu Imp. Turci. 1722. f.

XXVI. Persecution and War are false means of extending Christianity. Just Limits of Toleration.
XXVII. The true and apostolic means, are a solid open and consistent faith and doctrine, exemplary manners, and invincible patience.

XXVIII. The Christian Doctors injured their cause by employing the Sibylline and other forgeries, false revelations, and other pious frauds. The Emperors availed themselves too much of worldly inducements. The zeal of the Popes was artful and ambitious. Yet their services to the Christian name, in Germany, and other nations, merit that approbation, which is expressed by St. Paul to the Philippians, i. 18.

XXIX. Marriages, glory, wealth, power, politics, heresy, the Disciplina Arcani, and the perfidy of the Helcefaite in occasionally denying Christ. Euseb. H. E. VI. 38.

XXX. Crusades, began in 1090. After the Franks had taken Antioch, A. 1098, and Jerusalem, A. 1099. and the victory at Ascalon, A. 1100, they erected a Christian kingdom. St. Louis took Damietta, A. 1249. In 1204 the Franks founded the French Empire at Constantinople, which continued till 1260. Jerusalem taken by Saladin, 1188, was recovered by Frederick II. 1229: but the Saracens regained it in 1224, and Antioch in 1268, and expelled the Christians from all Syria in 1291. The Popes pursued the ruinous project of the Crusades with unremitting zeal for many ages, till they were alarmed with the dawn of Reformation in Europe, and directed the Holy War against the Schismatics, as they styled the Greek Church, or the heretical Albigenfes; Bohemians, Hufrites. See Gretser, de Cruce, tom. III. lib. 2.

XXXI. Religious Orders, falsely ascribed to Constantine the Great, were not instituted till the Crusades. Knights of St. John Baptist — Hospitallers—of Rhodes, now of Malta, A. 1113. Of the Holy Sepulchre, 1120. Templars, 1118, extinct, 1308. Teutonic Order, A. 1190. in Pruffia, 1224. Enfiferi, 1204, against the Pagans in Livonia. The Orders instituted in the xivth, xvth, and xviith Centuries were not religious, but military; except that of the Golden Fleece, in 1429.

XXXII. Missionaries, in the xvth, xviith, and xviiith Centuries. 1. The Jefuites, instituted A. 1540, took a special vow, of obedience to the Pope in the religious Missions; as is expressed in the bull for canonizing Ignatius Loyola and Francis Xavier, A. 1623. 'Xaverius, novus Indiarum Apostolus. Nam præter Indos, Brachmanes, et Malabares, Ipse primus Paravis, Malais, Malais, Iais, Acenis, Mindanais, Malacenfibus, et Japonibus Evangelium annunciaverat.' Corn. Hazart. S. J. Christianismus Catholicus per universum orbem propagatus sæc. xv. xvi. Viennæ, 1684. fol. 11. tomis. This Book treats of the Missions to Japan, China, Tartary, Cochinchina, Tunquin, Siam, India; to Abyssinia, Guinea, Angola, Congou, Monomotapa, Marocco, Fez, Tunis; to Peru, Paraguay, Brazil, Florida, Canada, Mexico, and Maragnan.

R. Millar, II. 263, observes, that 'none of these Missionaries ever put the Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments into the hands of their pretended profelytes, nor gave them any methodical instruction in the principles of the Christian Religion.' Yet I concur with the good Fabricius, p. 566. Nomen Christi etiam Missionariorum studiiis latius proferri, atque inter gentes personare, gaudeocum Apostolo et gaudebo, quamquam ut apud majores nostros olim obscuratum traditionibus humanis: nam ita quoque non dubito, illud salutare fore multis, donec post hoc crepusculum, puriorem plenamque lucem Evangelii populis illis concedere luminum Patri visum fuerit.

XXXIII. 1. The Roman College de propaganda fide was instituted, A. 1622, and wisely provided with a printing-office for the foreign Languages, distinguished by many capital impressions.

2. The tribunal of the Inquisition, began by Innocent III. who sent his Legate and twelve Cistercians to persecute the Albigenfes, A. 1204. It was established by Dominic at Thouloufe, A. 1212. its authority confirmed by the Emperor, A. 1225. and admitted into Italy, Poland, Spain, Portugal, Sicily, Sardinia, Flanders, and Artois: but rejected in France, Venice, the Netherlands which it was the means of liberating from the Spanish yoke. It is also established at Goa, Carthagina, and Mexico.

H. Grotii Annales Belgici. lib. I.
XXXIV. Pope Gregory XIII. established XIII Seminaries for the education of Missionaries; and there are above 1,xxx such Seminaries.

Ant. Walæus, a Calvinist, formed a Seminary in Holland, A. 1622. for the purpose of sending annually Twelve Missionaries to India. v. Walæi Opera 1643. tom. II. p. 437. ‘Etiam vulgares animæ constitutam ecclesiâm conservare queunt; sed aliquam de novo erigere, ut Rempublicam, tantum Heroum est.’

XXXV. Protestant Missions. From Geneva to America, A. 1556. From Holland to the East-Indies. J. Vischer (in the Biblioth. Brem. tom. III. et V.) gives extravagant accounts of 100,000 Christians in Batavia. Fabricius gives interesting notices of the Translations of the Holy Scriptures into the language of Formosa, 1661; of Malaye, 1687. The heroic munificence of that great Christian Philosopher, R. Boyle, procured editions of the New Testament in the Malayan Language, to be dispersed over the East Indies. Under his auspices, a Turkish version was published at Oxford, 1666, by W. Seaman, and was well received in the East. 8000 Copies of the Arabic version were dispersed at the expense of 2400£. by the Society for the propagation of the Gospel. Biblioth. Brem. tom. VI. p.711.
The Virginian or Indian Bible, by John Elliot, 1663. 4.
The Brasilian. the Finnish, 1642. the Lapland, 1669. the Esthonian, 1715. the Lettish, 1689.
The Royal College of Copenhagen, founded by Frederick IV. 1714. have Printing-Offices at Tranquebar, from whence the Missionaries have published the Bible in the Malabaric Tongue, and other works in Theology. The New Testament was published at Madras, 1727. Benjamin Schultze, a distinguished Missionary, printed versions of the Scriptures and many religious Tracts in the Damulic and Telugic language and character; of which see Fabric. p. 611—616.
The Swedes have generously laboured in diffusing the Gospel among the Finns and Laplanders. Hans Egede was sent Pastor to Greenland, 1721, and published the Psalms and St. Paul's Epistles in that language.

XXXVI. St. Bartholomew, St. Thomas, St. Pantænus, St. Frumentius, are reported to have carried Christianity into the East. Tamerlane founded his Empire, A. 1399. and his successors have occasionally favoured the Missionaries. Catrou, Empire du Mogol. 1705. 4. For one Mohammedan, there are two or three hundred Idolaters, in the Mogul's country. It is is deemed, far more difficult to convert the Mohammedans, than the Idolaters.

DISCOURSE IX.

XLI. TARTARY. 1. Asiatic Tartars. 2. Crim Tartars, or of Precop. Their extended Empire under Genghizchan, who died A. 1230, and under Tamerlane, who died 1415 in the 36th year of his reign. The Tartars conquered China, A. 1643, and expelled the ancient Christians.

ARABIA, received the Gospel from St. Paul and St. Peter. Gal. i. 17. There were many Christians before Mohammed. Pocock. specim. p. 136.

In the TURKISH Empire are Christians, of the 4 Patriarchates, Greeks, Romanists, Armenians, Copts, Maronites, Melchites, Nestorians, Jacobites, Iberians, Colchians.

the Christians, A.D. 707. who were protected by Charlemagne A.D. 790. In 1087 the Christians defeated the Saracens in Africa and Sicily. Pagi's Annals. The Mozarabic Churches flourished in the twelfth Century. Marmol. 1677. tom. II. p. 54, musarabe signifies un homme, qui scait l'arabe.

XLV. Abyssinia, or Ethiopia. A.D. 858. Euseb. H. E. II. 2. Candace was Queen of Meroë. St. Frumentius was their Evangelist, in the 11th Century. The king of Abyssinia assumes the titles of the 'most illustrious of Christian Soverains—the equal arbiter between Christians and Mohammedans.' Job Ludolfus. hist. Æthiop. 1681. f. et Commentarius, 1691. f.

XLVIII. North America, discovered 1492. Carrere, Columbus, poema, Romæ 1715. 8. Alexander VI. in bulla apud Bzovium, ad A. 1493. ut 'Populos in hujusmodi insulis et M 4 terris terris degentes ad Christianam Religionem sufficiendam inducere velitis.
Discourse IX.

XLIX. South America. Of the isthmus of Panama, whose Bishop is a suffragan of the Archbishop of Lima, see Dampier, 1699.

Paraguay: Lettr. Edif. tom. XI—XV.

Peru: Frezier, p. 398, on the multitude of monks and nuns.

Lima, founded by Pizarro, A. 1535, has more than 50 splendid Churches; besides 24 monasteries, and 12 nunneries, 4000 nuns. Lettr. Edif. tom. VII.

Of Brazil, Surinam, Chili, Amazone, Magellan, see the same Collection. tom. XII. p. 219, 231.

Le P. Samuel Fritz suivit le cours de la riviere Maragnon vers son embouchure: il a etabli fa mission sur cette grande riviere, laquelle en plusieurs endroits ressemble a une vaste mer. Il a soin de trente nations Indiennes, qui habitent autant d'iles, de celles, dont le Maragnon est couvert.

L. The prevalence of the Christian Religion is, under all its apparent disadvantages, a divine work: it cannot be ever extinct, though it may be removed from particular places: and there is not only prophetic assurance, but some probable reasons, to suppose that it will go on increasing, and become universal.
DISCOURSE X.

CHARACTERS OF ANTICHRIST.

ISAIAH LVII.

10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way, Yet saidst thou not, there is no hope: Thou hast found the life of thine hand, Therefore thou wast not grieved.

The evangelical predictions of this great Prophet proceed for the most part in the order of time, though with that latent method which becomes this kind of Inspiration. Having in the LXXIIIrd Chapter induced the Messiah expiating by his cross the sins of the world; in the LXXIVth he describes the purity of the Church in the Apostolic age; in the LVth invites both Jews and Gentiles to accept its privileges, by fulfilling its conditions of Faith and Repentance: predicting ch. LVI. the prevalence of the New Religion: for mine house shall be called an house of Prayer for all people.

But
But no sooner shall this happy event be accomplished by the civil establishment of the Church and the conversion of the barbarous nations; than a new and astonishing scene opens: the invasions of the barbarians, and the corruptions of Anti-christ.

LVI. 9. All ye beasts of the field, come to devour; Yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10. His watchmen are blind, they are all ignorant,
They are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark;
Sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.

11. Yea, they are greedy dogs, which can never have enough,
And they are shepherds that cannot understand:
They all look to their own way,
Everyone for his gain from his quarter.

12. Come ye, say they, I will fetch wine,
And we will fill ourselves with strong drink;
And to-morrow shall be as this day,
And much more abundant.
The dismembering of the Roman Empire, and the devastation of the East, consequent on the corruption of the clergy, is predicted by emblems well adapted to the barbarous invaders:

_All ye beasts of the field, come to devour;_
_Yea, all ye beasts in the forest._

By the beasts of the field we may understand the fanatic armies of the Saracens, somewhat humanized by letters and laws: by the beasts in the forest, the more brutal Huns, Turks, and Tartars, swarming from their uncultivated wood-lands. We may find the direct completion in, that age of revolutions, the 5th Century: when the Goths, the Huns, the Vandals, and the Heruli, invaded Italy, Germany, France, and Africa. In the 6th Century, the Scævili and Bulgarians passed the Danube, and brought great calamities on the Greek Empire. In Italy, the successors of Theodoric were conquered by Belisarius: and the kingdom of the Lombards by Charlemagne, in whose weak descendents the kingdom of Italy continued till the end of the 10th age: during during which, the Saracens infested Apulia and Calabria, and subdued Sicily and the Italic isles. The Hungarians, Normans, Danes, and Turks continued for several ages their predatory expeditions; till at the end of the xiiiith Century, the founders of the present Turkish empire advanced into Europe in quest of new habitations. In this and the next age, the Tartars under Tamerlane with immense though divided armies invaded Europe and Asia, and brought such horrors on Christendom as give pain in the relation. Since the irruption of Tamerlane, and the dissolution of his empire, History mentions no new incursions of Barbarians: by the conquest of China, the civilization of Russia, and the new art of War, those formidable emigrations have ceased; and there opens a prospect more favourable to Religion and Humanity.

The causes of the barbarism and desolation of Europe in the middle ages, here assigned by Inspiration, are the corruptions of the Eastern and Western Churches, especially of the hierarchy and whole body of the clergy, by ignorance and remissness in their sacred office; by a depraved stupidity in spiritual and divine things; by in-fatiable avarice, luxury, and ambition. The watchmen here censured are the Bishops and Clergy in Europe and the Lower Empire; who, awed by the sanctity of their office from more scandalous and open vices, were corrupted by the more specious pursuits of ambition, luxury, and gain. The completion of this prophecy must not be sought in a narrow corner of ancient Palestine, but in the Christian Church, now far and widely diffused; in its Bishops and more eminent Pastors, and the whole ecclesiastical order; till the mischief ended in the usurped dominion of Antichrist.

1. The primary cause of the corruption of the Clergy was the temporal splendour of the Church, under its nursing-fathers the Roman Emperors: when its patriarchal and episcopal dignities became such objects of ambition, as Ammianus describes, speaking of the See of Rome, for which Urslinus and Damasus were competitors. “When I reflect, says the military historian, on the luxury luxury of Rome, I do not wonder, that they who are emulous of such distinctions, should use every exertion to procure them, and should exult in obtaining the object of their ambition: enriched by the gifts of noble matrons*, they appear in splendid equipages, are magnificently habited, and are more sumptuously feasted than at royal tables. Yet they would be far more happy and respectable, if, despising the luxury of the capital, which only elicits and displays their vices, they would conduct their lives like some provincial Bishops, whose strict sobriety, the simplicity of their exterior, and the modesty of their aspect, render them estimable in the eyes of the true worshippers of the eternal deity."

2. A second precursor of Antichrist was the decline of Learning. The literature of the Roman Empire was for some time supported by a few great Divines, especially by St. Jerome and St. Augustine. But before the age of Charlemagne it was almost extinguished. That Emperor attempted to revive it, and spread its faint luster into France and Germany. But the Caroline empire being dismembered, and Italy divided by its contending tyrants and invaders; during this dark interval, the papacy was successively occupied by the worst of men, whose ill example completed the corruption of the clergy, and brought on the almost total eclipse of the xth age: when, we must not expect to find any traces of good government in the Church, but a mere chaos of impieties, preparative of the miserable revolutions and disorders which followed 1.

* Even the invidious splendour of the Roman Bishop was supported by the oblations of matrons.

Barrow, of the Pope's Supremacy, p. 401.

The glimmering of learning in these dark ages was directed, only to throw luster on the papacy: the School divines defended the decisions of Councils with false logic; and the Councils were so influenced, that they did not even deliberate on the most important innovations. The Greek Church, not less weak and corrupt-

1 Fra-Paolo, of benefices, ch. xx.
ed, though not so illiterate, neglected the study of Religion and the Scriptures, for feeble attempts in History and Philology: A lying spirit deprived the annals of the Church and the lives of the Saints, disting-guished by false miracles, superstition, and fanaticism, and by a zealous attachment to the thrones of Antichrist in their respective Churches of Rome and Constantinople.

In Germany the Othos had some success in settling the civil and ecclesiastical government; as had also the Capetian kings in France. But in both countries, the Bishops had become secularized, simonianal, and even military men, changing the crosier for the cuirass. During the German wars, begun by Henry IV. and Gregory VII. the depression of the Imperial power brought on a general subjection to the Papacy: the papal authority thus established, the Popes indulged their pride and cruelty, their luxury and lust, without control: notwithstanding the remonstrances of a few good men, worthy of better times.

The
The origin and progress of the ecclesiastical supremacy usurped by the Popes may be remotely traced from the augmented powers of Bishops in the 11th century, though they still retained their original purity. In the 11th century, Metropolitans in the chief cities presided over the Bishops of their respective provinces. The prerogatives of Bishops arose from the dignity of their cities; hence Irenæus ascribes to the Bishop of Rome a more potent principality; and Ammianus says, that the Prelates of the eternal city had the precedence. At the time of the Council of Nice, the Roman, Alexandrian, and Antiochian Churches had each their metropolitans, independent of one another; so that, in the 17th Century, the Bishop of Rome had only the rank of a Metropolitan over his own province within the limits of 3 miles from Rome: he derived his rank from the Imperial city, but was not superior to other metropolitans, was not the Patriarch of all the Western Churches, much less the MONARCH OF THE CHRISTIAN WORLD.
Before the peace of Constantine, the fair character of many Roman Bishops, the purity of faith, order and unity of the Roman Church, made them respectable. Soon after, the Arian contests made the orthodox take refuge in that Church. Thus Julius I. protected St. Athanasius, and Pope Innocent St. Chrysoptome: not pretending to any authority over the persecutors of those great Saints, well knowing that they would not be obeyed.

Leo the Great, A. 450, extorted from Valentinian III. a jurisdiction over all the Bishops of France; and first set up the pretense of St. Peter's Chair, and of making Rome supreme in religion, as it had been in empire *. And this Pope, who saw the Imperial City subject to a Barbarian, Germanic, properly merits the name of Antichrist. The Popish authors themselves, when pressed with St. Paul's prophecy, and the primitive tradition, that Antichrist should not come till the Roman Empire was not

* Sedes Roma Petri, quæ pastoralis honoris
Faciä caput mundi, quicquid non pollidet armis Religione tenet—— ——— Prosper. de ingratís. destroyed, contend that it still subsists in the Pope and his Supremacy.

The Popes now sent their Vicars into France; and with that commission transmitted the pallium, an imperial robe, which the Bishops had been used to receive from the Emperors: The Popes, emulating the Greek Patriarchs, gave it to their suffragans, and by this splendid distinction assumed a supremacy over all the Bishops who accepted it.

A. 381. the Council of Constantinople, can. III. gave their own Patriarchs the same rank as that of the Roman Bishops, because of the dignity of New Rome. Henceforth, we find the two Prelates in a constant emulation: at first, the Constantinopolitan styles the Roman his brother and fellow-servant. Both received from Justinian and the Councils the fastuous title of œcumenical Patriarchs: by which, however, was only meant, that each presided over his own suffragans. Pelagius II. A. 590. and his successor Gregory the Great reprobated this title title in the rival see as antichristian and diabolical. In his Letters, he speaks in the tone of a prophet, 'All that is foretold will happen. The king of pride is near at hand: and will be guarded by an army of priests.' The omen was accomplished in Boniface III. whom the brutal usurper Phocas declared Universal Bishop, and his see the head of all the Churches. His successor Boniface IV. obtained from the same tyrant a grant of the pantheon, which he dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and all the Saints, collecting relics from all the church-yards. Thus the papal idolatry succeeded to gentilism; and the superstition of the papacy aided by its domination went on with large strides, corrupting Christianity with pagan ceremonies.

The two horns of Antichrist were as yet of equal altitude; the with General Council declared them of equal dignity: both were styled, however absurdly, Universal Patriarchs; and both occasionally assumed the proud pretension of controlling their Soverains.
A. 712. Pope Constantine began the precedent of deposing kings in the person of Philippicus the Greek Emperor; and Justinian II. who succeeded him kissed the pontiff's foot. Gregory II. A. 726. absolved all Italy from its allegiance to Leo the Isaurian, and deprived him of the revenues. A. 733. Gregory III. excommunicated him as an heretical Prince.

A. 752. Childeric III. the last of the merovingian race, was dethroned by Pope Zachary, who gave the French monarchy to Pepin, maire-du-palais. Pope Stephen absolved him of his crime in being disloyal to his lawful king; and gave him the vain title of Patrician of Rome, in return for the exarchate of Ravenna and the sovranity of Italy, de facto, not de jure. For Pepin and Charlemagne, who made so ample grants to the papacy, granted them only in fee. The Pope swore allegiance. The dukedom of Rome fell to Charles the Great, A. 796. and Leo III. sent him a banner in token of subjection. For a long time the dominion of Rome was in the French Emperors. Charles asserted his supremacy by convening synods, and he condemned, in the Council of Francfort and in the Caroline Books, the gross superstition of image-worship, which had been established by the IId Council of Nice. He exercised all the rights of investiture over all the bishops of France and Italy, even that of electing the supreme pontiff.

The dictatorial power of the popes, as unerring in points of Faith, was not yet acknowledged; though bold advances had been made to it, by Pope Agatho, A. 678. unawed by the recent heresy of Pope Honorius, who asserted monothelism; and whose error disconcerts the defenders of the papal infallibility.

The Othos in the xth century checked the arrogance of the Roman Pontiffs. Otho the Great, imitating the example of Charlemagne, vindicated his supreme power over Italy and Rome, his right of appointing its prelate, and of investing the bishops. In 963, he deprived John xii. and in person received the homage of the Roman citizens and clergy, who took an oath, they they would never elect or consecrate a Pope without the Emperor's consent. In the next year, Leo VIII. on his election, restored to the Emperor all the imperial rights, and the perpetual privilege of investiture.

Otho III. made his preceptor Gerbert bishop of Rome, A. 998. He was a man of merit and literature: but for his skill in mechanics, astronomy, and philology, was accused of magic; and for his just notion of Antichrist, has been called hard names by the popish historians, heretic, blasphem'er, schismatic: how consistently with the sanctity they ascribe to St. Peter's chair, must be left to their own casuistry.

In the x1th century, the Emperors Henry II. and III. nobly opposed the papal encroachments: and Henry IV. who died A. 1106 in the 51st year of his reign, resisted the insolence of Gregory VII. who advanced the papacy to its highest pitch, and trampled on the Majesty of kings. He aspired to a sacred despotism, with unlimited powers, over all the world. He summoned Henry Henry IV. to Rome, to submit to his tribunal: as contumacious and not appearing, he deprived him of the Empire, absolved his subjects from their allegiance, nor relaxed his sentence, till he came on foot to Rome in the severity of winter, and made him the most abject submissions. But on resuming his Imperial rights, the Pope incited his subjects and his sons to rebel against him.

The Hildebrandine dictates (which are a genuine collection of his maxims *) assert, among other extravagant claims, that
2. The Roman pontiff is Universal Bishop.
3. that he has the sole right to the Imperial insignia.
9. that all princes owe him homage.
11. that he is the only name in the world.
12. that he has the right and power to depose kings.
16. that no General Council can be convened but by his mandate.
17. that no book of Scripture is canonical but by his authority.
19. that he can be judged by no man.
21. that all weighty causes must be refer-

* Lib. II. epist. 55. cited by Fabricius, B. G. XI. p. 590.
red to him. 22. that the Roman Church never hath erred nor can err. 25. that the Roman pontiff, canonically consecrated, is made holy by the merits of St. Peter, and cannot be otherwise. 27. In fine, that he can absolve subjects from their allegiance to princes obnoxious to the Holy See. For these merits Gregory VII. was canonized among the Saints, and in the present age, Benedict XIII. ordered a legend in honour of him to be added to the Roman breviary, with this encomium: 'quod contra Henrici Imparatoris impios conatus, fortis per omnia athleta, impavidus permanfit, &eque pro muro domûs Israil ponere non timuit, ac eundem Henricum in profundum malorum prolapsum, fidelium communione regnoque privavit, atque subditos ei populos fide ei data liberavit.' Some bishops in France, A. 1734, opposed this addition to the breviary; and the parliament of Paris suppressed it. But the Court of Rome still adheres to the Hildebrandine doctrine of universal and unlimited Monarchy.

The great aim of Gregory VII. being to amplify the spiritual Monarchy and temporal Reve-Revenues of the See of Rome; he adopted two maxims suited to the asperity of his temper and the ignorance of the times. The one that a superior is obliged to punish every delinquency; and it was his favourite text, Cursed is he that keepeth back his sword from blood 3. Another of his false maxims, that the world was administered by an equal Providence, as under the Jewish theocracy. Thus, he prayed to St. Peter to defeat the arms of Henry, who yet gained a signal victory over Rodolph his rival: and his principle turned against himself; for, after a cruel war in the State, and a lasting schism in the Church, he was besieged in Rome, and died in exile at Salernum.

From this epoch of the pontificate of Gregory VII. the hierarchy of the Church of Rome has all the notes and characters of Antichrist, specified by the Prophets. It will be agreeable to the design of this Lecture, to give a definition of Antichristianism, as constituting ‘an ecclesiastical 3 Jerem. xlviii. 10.

Society analogous to the ancient Babylon, the capital of an idolatrous Empire;—under the pretence of Mystery—exercising dominion over great Nations professing Christianity; distinguished, in its capital, by seven hills, in its dependencies, by ten kingdoms;—with ineffable pride and arrogance,—assuming divine honours, and attributes;—seducing the Nations from the sole worship of God through the one Mediator Jesus Christ, to the worship also of demons and images;—atrociously persecuting the true worshippers of the only God.—polluted with blasphemies;—with all kinds of luxury and impurity;—with poisonings, pretended sorcery and astrology;—addicted to a fordid avarice and spiritual traffic; and—for these enormities obnoxious to the exterminating wrath of Almighty God.'

These characters of Antichrist are verified in all the subsequent parts of the papal history, to the Reformation. I will give one instance, peculiarly interesting to ourselves, and to the English Church, the Pontificate of Innocent III. who far exceeded Gregory Gregory VII. in policy, and equalled his ambition. Innocent was a man of quality, and an able canonist. He began his pontificate with becoming moderation, A.D. 1198, refusing personal bribes, but attentive to recover the domains of the Church in Italy. He soon becomes active in all the public affairs of Europe and Asia: settles the succession to the crowns of Hungary, Norway, and the Empire: enters into a surprising detail of ecclesiastical business: and preaches the Crusade which established the Latins in the Empire of Constantinople. He exerted his arbitrary temper in the divorce between the King and Queen of France, assuming those powers, which he defended with the sophistry of misapplied Scriptures: I have set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out and to pull down and to destroy; to build and to plant: and, God made two great lights, the Pope and the Emperor. We find him chiefly busied in the affairs of England: first, protecting king John against his rival Philip Augustus, A.D. 1203, and making himself arbiter between them. After various contests about the Jerem. i. 10. Genef. i. 16. Primacy, Primacy, in 1211, he pronounced a sentence of deposition against the king; who, in a conference with his legate, A. 1213, gave to the Roman Church, the Pope, and his successors, the kingdoms of England and Ireland, submitting to hold them as the Pope's vassal. Innocent himself in his letters tells him truly enough, that his kingdom was become a kingdom of priests; and, accepting the donation, A. 1214, the interdict was taken off, by the bishop of Tusculum, having continued more than six years to the incredible distress of the nation. The next year, 1215, the barons having extorted the Great Charter from the reluctant monarch, he applied to the Pope to set it aside; and presented to his holiness, such articles of the Charter as bore hardest on his authority. The Pope attentively considered them; and with an angry brow, exclaimed, 'these barons would dethrone a king who wears the cross, and is under the protection of the holy See, and would alienate the property of the Roman Church. By St. Peter, we will not leave this attempt unpunished.' His holiness... excommunicated the barons, which was all he could do against the liberties of England. The excommunication was received with becoming contempt by those nobles. 'What, said they, will satisfy the avarice of Rome? what have these prelates to do with our wars? These usurers and simoniacs, without one spark of valour or nobility, would control the world by their excommunications. They meddle in our affairs with no other view, than to make the wealth of the kingdom center in the gulph of Italian rapacity.'

In 1216, Lewis the Dauphin made a descent on the southern and eastern counties. The Pope, grieved at these hostilities against his vassal, excommunicates the Dauphin; and was meditating a severer sentence against Philip Augustus. His troubled thoughts excited a fever, which inflamed by his usual high diet, ended in a paralysis and lethargy, July 16, 1216. Matthew Paris says, that king John deemed him the most proud and ambitious of men, insatiable of wealth, and capable of any crimes to acquire it. The year year was also memorable for the deaths of king John and of the Emperor: and for the complete establishment of the fanatic and persecuting orders of St. Francis and St. Dominic. The Inquisition had exercised all its horrors against the Albigenses; and Innocent III. finished his career in the Lateran council, decreeing by his sole authority and without any debate the grossest of all absurdities Transubstantiation. Thus, Innocent III. by means of the Crusades, the Mendicant Orders, and the anarchy in Germany, possessed an absolute authority over all Europe, and made all its thrones tremble at his thunders. In his Crusade against the Albigenses, who retained the faith and simplicity of the Apostolic Church, the merciless inquisition supported by a military force sacrificed myriads of victims. The prisons would not hold the confessors, and sixty thousand were butchered in the town of Beziers. Dominic by these expeditions enriched his brotherhood with vast revenues and splendid edifices: while the Count of Thoulouse and Soverain of Languedoc was excommuninicated and deposed for protecting his subjects from an unpitying priesthood. Thus, Antichrist inthroned, Religion lost its characteristic humanity.

In order to verify the completion of Prophecy in the foregoing characters of Antichrist, I shall conclude the present discourse with a succinct comment on those discriminating notes of the Great Apostacy which are predicted in the 51st Chapter of Isaiah.

First is foretold the premature death of the Martyrs, and of great and good men in the antichristian ages:

The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart;

And merciful men are taken away, none considering,

That the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.

From the ixth Age to the Reformation, the best characters religious and secular, who who withstood the spirit of Antichrist, were prematurely taken from the world. To give a very few instances, by the early death of the Greek Emperors Theophilus, A. 840, and of Calo-joannes worthy of his name, A. 1140, image-worship prevailed without controul. In the xvinth Century, Edward VI. King of England, and the two honest Popes, Adrian VI. and Marcellus II. reigned but a very short time. Thus the righteous perished.—Next, the Prophet furnishes a strong conviction of the antichristian Church, by specifying her chief enormities: viz. Persecution and Idolatry, Deification of the Pope’s person, and a complicated and fordid Superstition.

v. 3. Draw near hither, ye sons of the forceres—the word denotes a pretended Augur or Diviner, and the characters answer to that of the false-prophet, and the harlot, foretold by St. John.

v. 4. Against whom do ye sport yourselves? in the insolence of prosperous impiety:

* v. 5-8. 7 v. 9. 8 v. 10-13. יִנְנָה * O against against whom make ye a wide mouth? and draw out the tongue, with scornful irri

Are ye not children of Transgression, or apostacy? a seed of falsehood and imposture? About the beginning of the xirth Century was a prevailing rumour that Antichrist was to arise; so low were men in discerning his gradual advances: but from that epoch, the best and wisest considered the Papal Church as the Mother of Abomina tions. From that epoch, the Church of Rome hath branded the witnesses of Truth with titles of reproach, Picards, Lollards, Huguenots, Beguines, &c. besides the general appellation of Heretics: and it is observ able that the severest punishments, inflicted by her authority are aggravated by contempt and ridicule.

v. 5. Inflaming yourselves with idols under every green tree. The word * presents the very idea of the apocalyptic harlot, under which all the prophets cha-terize that passion for idolatry, which predominates in the apostate church.

Elim are the objects of false worship, both in Gentile antiquity, and in the modern adoration of saints or angels. Antichristian idolatry is aptly described by the characters of the Jewish; by which the prophets at once re-proved the corruptions of their own age, and forewarned the Church of still greater superstitions.

v. 6. The next note of Antichrist is Persecution: Slaying the children in the vallies, under the cliffs of the rocks. This passage is inexplicable, but by applying it to the events of the long persecutions in the vallies of Piedmont, and among the rocks of the Alps: which continued for several ages, with such signal cruelty, that the Gentile persecutions were comparatively sparing and moderate. Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion, they, they are thy lot: which seems obscurely to menace that extermination, which waits the Antichristian kingdom and its seat of empire.

We have contemplated the immature death of the Martyrs and Witnesses of Truth:
Truth: we have seen the adulterous Church deriding all attempts of reformation: exercising her inquisitorial persecutions: and augmenting her idolatries. The 9th verse is a key to the whole prophecy:

Thou wentest to the king with ointment,
And didst increase thy perfumes,
And didst send thy messengers afar off,
And didst debase thyself even unto hell.

If we would learn what king is here meant, let us consult that passage of St. John in which are included all the forms of the Roman government. There are seven kings, or forms of policy: five are fallen, viz. kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, military-tribunes; and one is, the imperial power: The other is not yet come, and when he cometh, he must continue a short space; denoting the kingdom of Italy, soon subdued by Theodoric. And the beast that was, and is not, even he is the Eighth, and is of the Seven, and goeth into perdition. This enigma denotes the Papal form of government, which was declared by Justinian, in 534, the head of all the Churches: thus it was of the Seven; or reigned in spirituals, as the Greek Emperors did in temporals. But when Gregory II. A. 727, shook off the yoke of the Emperor Leo, whom he had excommunicated, and subjected Rome and Italy to himself; from that time the Pope became the Eighth King. Henceforth he was properly a monarch, or civil soverain, and united the temporal with the spiritual sword; and in this double character, he received the homage of gifts and presents from all the Christian world, as the price of alliances, benefices, and even crowns. The greatest soverains demeaned themselves by an idolatrous prostration, sending distant embassies, and making the Court of Rome the center of war and politics, as well as of religion. All this the prophet expresses with great energy and becoming disdained:

7 Rev. xvii. 8.

Thou wentest to the king with ointment, and didst increase thy perfumes; and didst send thy messengers afar off, and didst debase thyself even unto hell.

6, 10. Thou art wearied in the greatness of thy way,
Yet saidst thou not there is no hope.

O 3 How
How lively a portrait of Romish superstition, labouring with its own weight! and of such prodigious extent and complicated variety, that the detail of her ceremonies, the lives of her saints, the records of her monastic orders, the decisions of her school-men and casuists, and the annals of her pontiffs, are a labyrinth of prolixity and imposture. Yet superstition, ever ingenious in finding pretences to evade reformation, and to support itself under its oppressive burdens, hath found her account in the gratification of her passions, especially of worldly interest and ambition:

Thou hast found the life of thine hand,
Therefore thou wast not grieved.

§ 11. And of whom hast thou been afraid, or feared,
That thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me,
Nor laid it to thy heart?

An ironical censure of that mixture of idolatrous worship with the principles of true Religion, which hath ever characterized the apostate Church, whether of ancient Israel,
Israel, or of Antichrist. Both have lied to God, and have been false, and forgetful of him, by debasing his worship with their idols and superstitions.

Have not I held my peace, even of old,
And thou fearest me not?

A long connivance and prosperous impunity made the Church of Rome secure in her enormities; careless of true Faith, corrupting divine worship, relaxing moral obligation, and given up to a worldly spirit of wealth and dominion. But

y. 12. I will declare thy righteousness and thy works,
For they shall not profit thee.

Rome boasts of her own righteousness: she styles herself the only Church, the infallible judge of controversies: she condemns, as heretics, all who oppose her decisions: she glories in her religious orders, her numerous saints; her pompous altars, and theatrical ceremonies: and, which is the peculiar peculiar scope of the Prophecy before us, the expressly asserts as a fundamental doctrine, justification before God by the merit of her own righteousness and moral works; yet laying more stress on such Grants and endowments as increase her opulence and power, than on the Virtues of the Heart. But the event has verified the prediction; they shall not profit thee. For, by the light of the Holy Scriptures, the darkness of popery and mystery of iniquity hath been explored; the nullity of her superstitious claims evinced; her false pretences to good works exploded; her doctrine of merit clearly refuted; and the justification of sinners placed on its only true foundation, a lively and fruitful faith in Jesus Christ.

v. 13. When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee:
But the wind shall carry them all away: vanity shall take them.

Companies may denote those hostile armies, crusades, and sacred wars, in past and perhaps future times, to support the Antichristian cause. How memorably veriverified! all are dissipated by the breath of God! reduced to vanity and annihilation! The greatest military enterprizes leaving no traces of power, or conquest, or conversion!

Or, thy companies may mean also those numerous fraternities of monastic orders, the great supporters of the Roman hierarchy, whose diminished lustre in the present age promises the completion of that clause;

Vanity shall take them; the wind shall carry them all away.

But he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land,

And shall inherit my holy mountain. that is,

The true Religion, restored in the reformed States of Europe, shall at length be everywhere professed in the Unity of the Spirit, and peaceably established by wise and Christian Princes. This great event is clearly predicted in the sequel of this Chapter:

14. Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way,

Take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people.
The emphatic repetition implies the ruin of true Religion which preceded the Reformation: Cast ye up a casseley or high-way of holiness."

God commands his Ministers to reform his Church. Obedient to the heavenly mandate, an illustrious band of learned and good men undertook the arduous work; with such zeal and success, as to emulate the Apostolic Age. The stumbling-blocks in the Papacy are well known to such as are conversant in the annals of the Reformation.

The acceptableness of the Reformation to Almighty God, results from that noble characteristic of Protestantism, The Renunciation of Merit, which I wish to impress on our minds and hearts as the proper consectary from this discourse.

V. 15. For thus saith the high and lofty One,
That inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy;
I dwell in the high and holy place,

\[11 \text{Isai. xxxv. 8.} \]
With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit;
To revive the spirit of the humble,
And to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

High and lofty, high in his essence, sublime in power: eternal and immense: whose name is Holy, and, as such, demands an holy worship: dwelling in the highest Heavens, yet residing in the contrite and humble heart: rejecting the proud,—those, who are either elated with the pride of Reason and of conscious Virtue; or with the pride of Superstition, and its vain pretence to supererogating Merit: giving grace to the humble, to those, who in the true evangelical poverty of Spirit  'Renounce their righteous and unrighteous deeds,' and rely only on a Saviour's infinite desert, to pardon their Sins, and to present to God's acceptance their lowly and unassuming Virtues. To revive the Spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones: a graceful and emphatic repetition, much in use with the Sacred Writers, when they describe the economy of the Holy Spirit.
DISCOURSE X.

Spirit, in restoring the Soul to its original integrity, sanctifying it wholly, and refreshing it with the consolations of divine favour.

§. 17. For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth
And smote him: I hid me, and was wroth:
And he went on frowardly in the way of his heart.

Covetousness here denotes any inordinate passion, particularly that selfishness, combined of ambition and avarice, which is the source of every evil, substituting for faith and probity a proud and venal impiety. The papal superstition, founded in these insatiable appetites, had long excited

* Covetousness יֵּֽשֶּֽׁב denotes any inordinate passion or pursuit: particularly, that selfishness, compounded of Avarice and Ambition, so well described by the moralizing profligate, Salust. in Catil. c. x. primo pecuniae, deinde imperii cupidus crevit: ea quasi materies omnium malorum fuerer. namque avaritia fidem, probitatem, ceteraque artis bonas subvertit; pro his superbiam, crudelitatem, deos negligere, omnia venalia habere edocuit. et c. xi. fed primo magis ambitios, quam avaritia, animos hominum exercebat.
the divine displeasure; which expressed itself both in temporal calamities and spiritual desertions. Yet, in vain the Northern barbarians invaded the corrupted Church; in vain the Western Christians turned their crusades against the Greek Empire; in vain, were both dismembered by the fanatic armies of the Saracens. In both the thrones of Antichrist, Superstition went its train, till it grew in its progress equally corrupt and calamitous. It is observable, that the history of the Middle Ages ascribes those calamities, to the avarice, the luxury, and despotic policy, of the Roman court and hierarchy.

In this crisis, the Divine interposition is thus expressed:

x. 18. I have seen his ways, and will heal him; I will lead him also, and restore comforts to him, and to his mourners.

I have seen with compassion the simple and credulous world seduced by Antichrist. I will heal him by remission and reformation: I will
I will lead him by my faithful Ministers: I will restore the consolations of my Spirit unto him, the bewildered people; and to his mourners, the witnesses of Truth, who, amidst the papal darkness, were the illustrious asserters of the faith and rights of Christians.

v. 19. I create the fruit of the lips: I alone give power and efficacy to the Ministry of the Gospel. Peace, peace, to him that is far off, and to him that is near, faith the Lord, and I will heal him. As the original Gospel was a general blessing, offered to Jews and Gentiles; so, the Reformation proposed anew the same eternal Gospel, to all who sought reconciliation and peace with God, through Faith in Jesus Christ;—to all, remote and near. The progress of the Reformation was worthy of the purity of its principle. The most potent States and Republics of Europe were the ample theatre of this great revolution; the effects of which were answerable to the dispositions, with which so divine a benefit was either received or rejected. The Reformation, productive of Liberty, Science, Peace, wherever it hath been established by Law and cherished by the People; hath been the cause of long and frequent wars and civil commotions, in the Popish Governments, who have attempted to check its progress by force and intolerance. Of which we have memorable examples; on the one part, in the glory and tranquillity of the reign of Elizabeth: on the other, in the declining power of the Court of Rome; of the Spanish monarchy, from Charles V. to Philip IV. and in France, during the tragical and inglorious reigns of Charles IX. and Henry III. All which abundantly verifies the conclusion of this prophecy, in its collective as well as private application:

3.20. But the wicked are like the troubled Sea, When it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

21. There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.
INTERPRETERS differ in applying those marks of a corrupt Church. The Rabbins apply them to the Jewish priesthood about the times of the Captivity. More probably, they respect the unworthy H. PP. and priesthood, who succeeded Onias III. as appears from Josephus and the books of Maccabees. Eusebius, Jerome, Cyril, apply them to the Scribes and Pharisees of the age of Our Blessed Saviour; but the characters do not agree to that priesthood, more distinguished by the spiritual than carnal vices. They were sadly verified by the Romish clergy of the middle ages: and the application is confirmed by LVI. 8. which describes the Christian Church composed of Jews and Gentiles, and, y. 7. the house of God made an house of prayer for all people: and to this period of the Middle Age the series of the prophecies evidently leads us.

Quæres mecum implementum hujus prophetiæ, non in angulo Terræ Chananææ, sed in Ecclesia Christiana, latissime jam diffusâ, post plures gentes finu sua receptas; ejus præfectis, pastoribus, et Episcopis, et Ordine Ecclesiasticò, post Con-
Discourse X.

Conflantini et Justiniani tempora, sese magis magisque corrupto, usque quopost iux CHRISTIANISINI seculum, labes totum fere pervaferit corpus, tam in Oriente quam in Occidente.

Page 196.

Ammianus. XXVII. 3. Damasus et Ursinus supra humanum modum ad rapiendam episcopatum sedem ardentes scissis studiis acerrime conflictabantur, adusque mortis vulnerumque discrimina adjumentis utriusque partis progressis. Quæ nec corrigere sufficiens Juventius nec mollire, coactus vi magna secessit in suburbanum. Et in concertatione superaverat, Damasus, parte quæ ei favebat instante: constatque, in basilica Sicinini, ubi ritus Christiani est conventicum, uno die centum triginta septem reperta cadavera peremp- torum, efferatamque diu plebem ægræ posteà delenitam. Neque ego abnuo, ollentationem rerum considerans urbanarum, hujus rei cupidos, ob impetrandum quod adpetunt, omni conditione laterum jurgari debere, cum id adepti futuri sint ita securi, ut ditentur oblationibus matronarum, procedantque vehiculis insidentes, circumspice vestiti, epulas curantes profusas, adeo ut eorum convivia regales superent mensas. Qui esse poterant beati revera, si, magnitudine urbis despecta, quam vitii opposunt, ad imitationem Antistitum quorundam provincialium viverent: quos tenuitas edendi potandique parciissimè, vilitas etiam indumentorum, et superculia humum spectantia, perpetuo Numini verifique ejus cultoribus ut puros commendant et verecundos.

P matro-

In compiling this account of the Papal Usurpations, not having access to original authors, I have chiefly followed a very learned Dissertation of S. Deylingius, Obff. Misc. Lipf. 1736. 4. De Novitate Regiminis Monarchici in Ecclesiæ Univerfam: p. 420—536.

PAGE 193.

PAGE 195.
Nic. Alemannus, præf. in arc. hist. Speaking of Justinian’s supporting the arrogant pretensions of the Cætan patriarchs, and giving the fastuous title of oecumenical bishop to John of Cappadocia; has this expression; vixque tandem dext rum trum ecclesiae folium Pontifici Romano ægrè concefferit, where the dextrum folium is very apposite to the two horns of the Antichristian Lamb, as explained by Daubuz of the Greek and Latin Churches. See Anecd. c. xiii.

In the anecdota, c. xv. we read, that the Empress Theodora's courtiers kissed her feet:

ταρσου ἐκαλερον χειλει αἰφαμενοι. This woman acted, as if she had studiously formed her whole character on that of the Babylonian harlot, the representative of both the corrupted Churches.

The Emperors Caligula and Domitian exacted the homage of kissing their feet, of being deified, and of having the divine titles: and give a signal resemblance of the pagan Pontifex Max. to the same office and title in Antichrist, as God sitting in the Temple of God, and shewing himself that he is God. 2 Theff. ii. 4.
quos rumor ille pervenit, ad tantam pietatem et compassionis misericordiam movit, ut, pro eo multis precibus et lachrymis intercedentes, omnes quidem insolitam nostræ mentis duri-tiam mirarentur; nonnulli vero in nobis non Apostolicœ severitatis gravitatem, sed quasi tyrañnicœ feritatis crudelitatem esse clamarent.
Denique instantia compunctionis ejus, et tanta omnium qui ibi adherant supplicatione deviēti, tandem eum, relaxato anathematis vinculo, in communionis gratiam, et finum sanctae matris ecclesiæ recepimus. Hæc in præfata epistolæ Hildebrandus, quæ fane ipsum tantæ arrogantiae hominem suisse arguunt, ut alterum illi æqualem haud facile protuleris, si modo duos alios Pontifices, Alexandrum III. et Cælestinum itidem III. excipias. Jo. Richardsoni præeleæ.
xxxiv. p. 228.

Sigonius, de Regno Italici, lib. IX. ad Α. 1077.
Francisci Pagi breviarum, illuftriora Pontificum Rom. gelta complectens, tom. II. p. 438.

Fabricius. B. G. XI. 589. ' Gregorii VII.
Registrum, sive Epistolæ Libri, singuli singulîs Pontificatus ejus tributi annis. Primus continet epistolæ 85. Secundus 77. in cujus 55ta ad Laudensæ, exstant celebria illa Dictata Papæ, suprematum sive totatum Pontificiæ potestatis nullis circumscriptæ limitibus γυμη τη κεφαλη.
D I S C O U R S E X. 229

Christianus orbis obtrudentia.—Ut vero appareat, quosque pudor posset perire de rebus, adscribam quæ modo memoravi dictata papæ, illisque ex lib. IX. epist. 3. juramentum Imp. Henrico IV. delatum subjiciam. Videant interim, qui hodie despotica principum imperium ita commendant et exacuum, conculcata Sacerdotii et Ordinum auctoritate, an pestilentiam etiam Hildebrandismo ipso pestem, quantum in ipsis est, in Christianum orbem inducant.

1. Quod Romana ecclesia a solo Domino sit fundata.
2. Quod solus Romanus pontifex jure dicatur universalis.
3. Quod ille solus posset deponere Episcopos vel reconciliare.
4. Quod Legatus ejus omnibus Episcopis praefit in Concilio, etiam inferioris generis, et adversus eos sententiam depositionis posset dare.
5. Quod abstantes posset deponere.
6. Quod cum excommunicatis ab illo, inter caetera, nec in eadem domo debemus manere.
7. Quod illi foli licet pro temporis necessitate novas leges condere, novas plebes congregare, de Canonica Abbatiam facere, et contra, divitem episcopatum dividere, inopcs unire.

P 3 8. Quod
8. Quod folus possit uti imperialibus insigniis.
9. Quod folius Papæ pedes omnes principes deosculentur.
10. Quod illius folius nomen in ecclesiis recitetur.
11. Quod unicum est nomen in mundo.
12. Quod illi liceat imperatores deponere.
14. Quod de omnī Ecclesiae quocunque voluerit clericum valeat ordinare.
15. Quod ab illo ordinatus alii Ecclesiae præesse potest, sed non militare: et quod ab aliquo episcopo non debet superiorem gradum accipere.
16. Quod nulla synodus absque præcepto ejus debet Generalis vocari.
17. Quod nullum capitulum, nullusque liber Canonicus habeatur absque illius auctoritate.
18. Quod sententia illius a nullo debet retractari, et ipse omnium folus retractare possit.
19. Quod a nemine ipse judicari debet.
20. Quod nullus audeat condemnare Apostolicam sedem appellantem.
21. Quod majores causæ cujuscunque Ecclesiae ad eum referri debeant.
22. Quod Romana Ecclesia nunquam erravit, nec in perpetuum, Scriptura testante, errabit.
23. Quod Romanus Pontifex, si canonice fuerit ordinatus, meritis B. Petri indubitanter efficiter efficitur Sanétus, testante S. Ennodio Papiensi episcopo, ei multis sanétis patribus faventibus, sicut in decretis beati Symmachyi Papæ continetur.
D I S C O U R S E X. 231

24. Quod illius præcepto et licentia Subjectis liceat accusare.

25. Quod absque synodali conventu possit Episcopos deponere et reconciliare.

26. Quod Catholicus non habeatur, qui non concordat Romanæ Ecclesiæ.

27. Quod a fidelitate iniquorum subjectos poteít absolvere.

'Ab hac hora et deinceps fidelis ero per rectam fidem beato Petro Apostolo ejusque vicario Papæ Gregario, qui nunc in carne vivit: et quodcunque mihi ipse papa præceperit, sub his videlicet verbis, per veram obedientiam, fideliter, sicut oportet Christianum, observato.' De ordinatione vero ecclesiariurn, et de terris vel censu, quæ Constantinus Imp. vel Carolus Sancto Petro dederunt, et de omnibus Ecclesiis vel prædiis, quæ Apostolicae sedi ab aliquibus viris vel mulierebus aliquo tempore sunt oblata vel concessa, et in mea sunt vel fuerint potestate, ita conveniam cum Papa, ut pericum sacrilegiit et perditionem animæ meæ non incurram: et Deo, sanctoque Petro, adjuvante Christo, dignum P 4 hono.
honorem et utilitatem impendam: et eo die, quando illum primitus videro, fideliter per manus meas miles Sancti Petri et illius efficiar.

PAGE 201.

veterum Hildebrandum tanquam ferocissimam bellumam execrati sunt. Legantur Acta Concilii Brixienfs, An. mlxxx. celebrati, apud Harduinum, T. VI. P. I. f. 1595, ubi ejus seelera vivis coloribus depinguntur; necnon Aventinus, lib. V. f. 455. Sed recentiores tan-torum malorum autorem ob res adeo præclare gestas non solum divorum numero adscripterunt, fed nuper admodum novam ut appellant Legendam in honorem et memoriam divi Gregorii VII. promulgarunt. De Gregorio VII. divis ad-scripto legantur Acta Sanctorum ad diem xxv Maii, tom. VI. f. 70. seq. Hoc ipsum officium in Hildebrandi memoriam et honorem compositum, antea in sola ecclesia Salernitana, ubi papa iste in exilio mortuus est, recitatum, sed a Bene-dicto XIII. universo orbi obtrusum exhibetur in Bibliothecae Francoise, T. XIII. p. 299.
Videatur etiam Bibliotheca Italique T. VI,
Num. 7. de la Legende de Gregoire VII. p. 205.'
PAGE 202.

'Ipse autem Henricus cum suis fatoribus, in omni congressione belli, nullas vires, nullamque in vita sua victoriam obtineat.'

Bulla Excomm. ap. Richardson, p. 231.

The Antichristian harlot, exciting this unnatural war against Henry, reminds one of Virgil's Aeneid.

Cura tibi divum effigies et templum tueri:
Bella viri pacemque gerant, queis bella gerenda. VII. 444.

En ego via sita, quam veri effeota senectus
Arma inter regum falsa formidine ludit.
Respice ad haec: adsum dirarum ab fede fororum;
Bella manu lethumque gero.—v. 455.

PAGE 203.

Adamantino velut nexu propositionis veritas conftat.—Hierarchiam ecclesiae Romanae dominantem, inde a Gregorii VII. temporibus maxime, esse cætum talem, qui (1) Babylonii Chaldææ quadantenus conveniens, (2) sub mysteriorum, seu religionis Christianæ prætextu, (3) imperium in civitate magna in populum magnum animalem, Christi nomen professuum licet, septem collibus, totidemque provinciis distinctum, multorum Regum potentia suffultum, obtinet; seque immane faftu, habituque prætumido, (5) ceu numen Divinitatis particeps, ab eo religioso coli patitur, (6) adeoque populum fibi obnoxium a vero Dei cultu ad sui et creaturarum cultum falsamque religionem modis omnibus seducit; (7) sanétos veri Dei cultores atrociter persequitur; (8) blasphemiis, (9) luxuria, (10) veneficiis, (11) avaritia et nundinatione spirituali fe fé immaniter polluit, (12) severumque idcirco Dei judicium provocans, illud aliquatenus jam subivit, ct porro subiturus est. Quæ duodecim demonstrationis capita, ordine ut figillatim perfecturus, Deum veneror, ut consilium laborisque meum Ecclesiæ prosperet; et aperta rerum luce, prædictionum factorumque harmonia perspecta, Babylonem agnoscant salutariter, propereque deserant, quotquot ejus amore præpostero ad perniciem suam haÉtenus arserunt.

This definition of Antichrist is taken from Jo. Henr. Heideggeri הוב רבעי מַם seu in Divi Johannis Apocalypseos Prophetiam de Babylon Magna Diatribæ. Lugd. Batav. 1687. 2 vois. 4to. Diff. V. and it is illustrated in that work with great erudition and the clearest evidence.

Of the parallel between Babylon and Rome see the elaborate Notes of Daubuz, on Rev. xvii. 3. and Heidegger, Diff. VI.

Nissuna Riforma potersi fare, la quale non diminuisca l’Entrate Ecclesiastiche: le quali havendo quattro fonti, uno temporale, le rendite dello Stato Ecclesiastico, gli altri spirituali, L’Indulgenze, Le Dispense, La Collagatione de Beneficii: non si può otturar alcuno di questi, che le entrate non restino troncate in un quarto. p. 24.

lib. III. 5. de Lollardis. p. 652. Haec vesana est Pontificiorum ratio, ut a partibus suis discedentes probrosis verbis afficiant: qua ratione, faepius viri integerrimi adpellationes tulerunt nefarias. Ita quoque Lollardorum majores, imirum Waldenses, vocatos esse Albigensis, Arianos, Manicheos, Gnosticos, Adamitas, Catharos, Arnoldistas, Josephinos, pauperes de Lugduno five Leonistas, Fratricellos, Begardos, Pallagerios, Paterno, Tholosanos, Bulgars, Picardos, Infabbatharios, Turlupinos, Lollardos de quibus nobis res est, Pileatos, Caputiatos.

See the notes on that dissertation, in which the origin of these names is investigated.

Of the Waldenses, A. 1170: Thuanus, l. VI.
A. 1550. p. 185. edit. 1620. XXII omnino vici numerantur, de quibus sumnum ab Oppeda sumtum supplicium est. p. 191.

Walter Lollard was condemned to the flames,
1322: in his own lifetime, he had 80,000 disciples: his doctrine soon spread in Austria,
Bohemia, &c. and was revived in England by John Wiclef. Limborch. hist. inquis. 1. 18. 22.

Huguenots. Egnots, du mot Eidgnoffen, alliés Spondanus, A. 1307, et 1560.
DISCOURSE X.

PAGE 212.

Mr. Mann's MS. cited by Bishop Newton, V.3, p. 304. Quis igitur rex septimus erit? Nimirum, ipse papa. Nam ex quo, A.D. 534. eum Ecclesiaram omnium Caput declaravit Justinianus, alii omnium judicem, ipsum a nullo judicandum; tanta reverentia et obsequio ab Imp. ipsis cultus est, tanta auctoritate ipsos subinde reprehendit, interdum etiam anathemate perculit, ut non minus dicendus fit regnasse in spiritualibus, quamvis se subditum semper servumque servorum diceret, quam in temporalibus imperatores. Tunc igitur Papa e septem illis, id est, ex genere atque ordine illorum principum qui praecesserant, esse dicendus erat: donec A.D. 727. Leonis imp. jugum, quem anno superiore excomunicarat, prorsus excussit Gregorius II. Romanique et regiones vicinas sibi subjicit. Ex illo enim tempore, Papa rex oclavus merito haberipoteft, cum gladio spirituali temporalem quoque dehinc adeptus.

Compare Mr. Daubuz. p. 567, and p. 791.

Of the revolutions in the Middle Ages, see Vitringa on this place of Isaiah, and on Rev.ix. p. 413, where he recounts the conquests of the Saracens, the Turks, the Tartars, the Othmans; Of Tamerlane, Spondanus, A. 1390—1402. His Laws have been lately published: 'Institutes of Timour,' 1784. 4to.
Quæris, quæ infania homines in hac operosâ superstitione detineat? una ratio est, accommodata est ad cupiditatem carnis; hæc sustinet vitam manus, ne manus fatigetur ac laffetur, aut cultor fatiscat. Vitringa, p. 757.

The Romish Superstition is a perfect contrast to the simplicity of the Gospel. The Gospel reveals One Mediator and Intercessor with God: Popery appoints very many. The Gospel appoints no festival, but the Lord's Day: Popery consecrates every day in the year to one or more of her intercessors. For one order of Christians, the substitutes many orders of --- eremites and friars,

Black, white, and grey, with all their trumpery.

For houses of Prayer, she delights in superb Temples and Altars. All the privileges, and the sacraments, of the Gospel are given gratis: Popery exacts a round sum of money, for Masses, Indulgences, and Remissions. In fine, our liberty in Christ Jesus is here exchanged for the jurisdiction of an ecclesiastical despot, usurping the throne of God and of Christ, that is, the Tribunal of Conscience.
The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2. Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God.

3. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel: there is no secret that they can hide from thee.

4. With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures.

5. By thy great wisdom, and by thy traffic hast thou increased thy riches, and thine heart is lifted up because of thy riches.

6. There-
6. Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God;

7. Behold therefore, I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8. They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas.

9. Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and no God in the hand of him that slayeth thee.

10. Thou shalt die the deaths of the uncircumcised, by the hand of strangers: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

Maimonides elegantly illustrates the Mystic Allegory, from a passage in the Book of Proverbs. 'A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver'. These pictures are sculptures in relief on works of silver perforated in net-work.

Prov. xxv. 11.
work, or filagree. The apples or fruits of gold within such a net-work of silver, is the parabolic sense of literal expression. In a word, which has a double face, in which there is something visible and something concealed, it is requisite, that the external and apparent sense should be as silver, but the internal sense by far superior, in the proportion that Gold bears to Silver. The exterior is so contrived, as to call the attention to that which is within. For as the golden fruits in a silver basket, if carelessly seen through the apertures, will seem mere silver like the vessel that contains them, to the inattentive and distant Spectator; so, when nearer and more accurately inspected, the silver basket discloses the gold within. Thus in the parables of the prophets of blessed memory the exterior and apparent sense contains excellent wisdom, of much utility to the conservation and direction of human society: but within, it includes that superior wisdom, which instructs us what ought to be believed and highly valued in Religious Science. The prophetic Parables are of two kinds; in some, each single word denotes some proper counterpart. But there are others, in which the whole Parable is significant of the hidden sense; in which, amidst the abundance of expression, every word has not its weight in the emblem, and does not apply to the thing signified; but either serves the purpose of mere elegance, or more effectually to involve and hide the Allegory. For the diction follows the nature of the subject, from whence the parable is taken.

I shall select an instance of a Mystic Allegory, or Prophetic Emblem, in which the completion, though still future and perhaps remote, is so clearly ascertained, as to establish the principle on which it is founded. In the sublime predictions of Ezekiel against the king and city of Tyre, the divine prescience not only foretels a near event, the taking of that great commercial city by the Chaldeans; but also extends its view to the Mystic Tyre, the spiritual mart of gainful superstition, and to its idolized and self-deified Monarch.

The historic completion of this prophecy is related by the Prophet himself; for it was of so near an event, that, but for the mystic sense, it would hardly have been given so circumstantially. Tyre was taken by Nebuchadrezzar, after a long and obstinate siege of XIII years. In the seven and twentieth year, of Ezekiel's own captivity, after this memorable siege was ended, the word of the Lord came unto Ezekiel, saying, Son of man, Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus; every head was made bald, and every shoulder was peeled: yet had he no wages nor his army for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, behold I will give the land of Egypt, unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army. I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour, wherewith he served against Tyrus, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God.

When the prevailing fortune of Nebuchadrezzar (who, according to Strabo, extended his conquests farther than Hercules)

---

2 Ezek. xxix. 17—20. 3 Strabo, l. xv. p. 687.
DISCOURSE XI.

had born down all resistance: after the taking of Jerusalem, Continental or Old Tyre was rasied to the ground, under Ithobalus II. the primary subject of this Prophecy. During a siege of xiii years, the inhabitants transported their richest effects to the Island on which they built the New Tyre, which was taken by Alexander, in the 1st year of the cxiiith Olympiad *. The Old City was never rebuilt, and it is of that city, not the New-one, that the Prophecy is to be understood historically. Scylax accurately distinguishes the two Cities: 1. the ancient City, with its Port included within the walls, 111 stadia from the Sea, with a River passing through it. 2. the insular Tyre, about viii stadia from the Land, which was the residence of the Kings, from the death of Ithobalus II. to the reign of Azelmicus, when Alexander took it *.

* Diodor. xiii. 40—47. & xix. 86.

The Tyrians of both periods were distinguished by their magnificent superstition. Hiram, the friend of Solomon, joined the Temple of Jupiter Olympus to his Capital, and dedicated in it a Column of Gold, with many rich donations. He consecrated other Temples, especially those of Hercules and Astarte. The Baal so much worshipped by Ahab, was the Tyrian Hercules, that is, Moloch or the Sun.

The Mystic Tyre will be considered in a double point of resemblance, its commerce, and its superstition.

That emporium of Religious Traffic is described by St. John in characters purposely copied from Ezekiel, in order to establish the coincidence of both Prophecies, both terminating in the same subject. The Traffic of the Church of Rome is specified both literally and allegorically, the literal censure of the luxury of the Romish Church being founded on Ezekiel's historic description of the Tyrian Commerce. The Merchants of the Earth shall weep and mourn over her, for no man buyeth her merchandize.
any more: the merchandize of gold and silver and precious stones, and of pearls; and fine linen and purple and silk and scarlet; and all thine or citron wood, and all manner of vessels of most precious wood; and of brass, and iron, and marble; and cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincense; and wine and oil, and fine flour, and wheat; and beasts, and sheep, and horses, and chariots, and slaves, and souls of men. Other Prophets have also predicted this enormous abuse of the Christian Religion, first debased into Superstition, and Superstition itself made the instrument of Luxury, Avarice, and Secularity. Daniel, predicting the demonolatry of Antichrist, adds, he shall cause the priesthood to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain. St. Jude and St. Peter had this apostate Church in view, particularly specifying its mercenary character: Through covetousness shall they with feigned words make merchandize of you. An heart they have exercised with covetous practices, following the way of Balaam, who loved the wages of unrighteousness.

5 Rev. xviii.1—19. 6 Dan. xi.39. 7 2 Pet. ii.3. Jude, y.11.
It is essential to my subject, before I enter on Ezekiel's Prophecy, to give a short view, for the detail would occupy an ample volume, of the lucrative arts of the Church of Rome, and of her continual attention to that worldly traffic, which is the soul that animates her superstition. I have already given specimens of the policy of the Court of Rome in making Kings her feudatories, and levying taxes on their kingdoms. This antichristian policy was checked by the great schism, A. 1378—1428, which followed the LXX years' residence of the Popes at Avignon, A. 1305—1377, and their return from their Babylonian Captivity, as their writers call it. The schism, which occupied the Council of Constance, A. 1415, together with the diffusion of literature by the Art of Printing, brought on the Reformation in the next age. These were the immediate causes of weakening the papal power, and of the defection from her yoke. The diminution of her authority led the antichristian Church to have recourse to oppressive exactions. In the first first of these periods, the Popes of Avignon put in practice the Taxa Cancellariæ, Annates, Reservations, Provisions, Expectatives, and the most scandalous Simony. The Taxa Cameræ is a school of vice: it gives to all an absolution, to many a licence, for the greatest sins. The licences were printed at Paris in the year 1500. The fees were published in 1520 by the Papal authority; by which a price is set on the worst enormities. Innocent VIII. was either the author or inlarger of these Chancery Taxes; and there are glosses upon them, in which the scholiast intimates, that he must conceal some things to avoid scandal.

The Romish Civilians deny that the Pope can incur simony, though he should sell benefices; because H. H. makes or finds every thing holy. The Pope professes himself supreme collator of benefices. A famous historian 8, defends the prodigious simony of Leo X. as becoming the magnificence of the head of the church. The same writer afferts the Dominican tenet, 8. Cardinal Pallavicino, lib. i. cap. 2, 3.

that the church ought to be distinguished by worldly grandeur. The Romanists own, that the idolatry and corrupt practices of the church are necessary to maintain the splendour of the court of Rome. Thus they reason:—the vulgar are fond of theatrical pomp in religion;—the nobility, and generally all men, delight in an easy, splendid, and luxurious life. This humour is by all means to be cherished, because Christ came to make the church happy, and pleasures, riches, and honours, are necessary to this great end. Hence they vindicate the ways of acquiring those pleasures, wealth, and honours, which are practised in that Church; such as simony, first fruits, pensions, fine-cures, accumulated pluralities, dispensations, appeals, prohibitions, jubilees, exemptions, and the establishment of religious orders. So that idolatry and luxurious corruptions are held essential to religion, in order to maintain the luxury of the Clergy, and the magnificence of the Church and Court of Rome. By these means, a third part of the whole property of Italy is possessed by the monastic orders.

By
By the contract called Precaria, whoever made a gift of his estate to the Church, had the profits or usufruct returned him again, and twice the value besides, during his life: and to those, who would quit their usufruct also to the Church, she gave three times the value in other estates of the Church to enjoy in exchange. This usage passed from France into Italy. This contract turned so manifestly to the advantage of those who thus trebled their present income, that the Church was an immense gainer after the death of the donors. The Church's title also became a safeguard to those who were too weak to defend their estates from the great and powerful; who dared not touch them, when once they became signories of the Church: and whenever the male-line of those feudatories came to fail, the succession fell to the Church.

To give a few examples of the trade and traffic of Religion: Saint-worship is so lucrative a branch of commerce, that from Loreto alone the Pope collects an annual revenue of 100,000l. centena millia aureorum:

* Fra-Paolo, of Benefices. ch. xix.
Discourse XI.

orum: and the riches of that shrine (the greatest insult in all respects on the common sense of mankind) are inestimable.

Purgatory is a great source of gain; its fancied pains being relaxed for money. Revelations and spectres of souls in purgatory were carried to so extreme abuse, that the Council of Trent attempted to regulate this traffic.

In the fictitious sacrament of Penance, the penitentiaries commute their penances for fines in money. The Lent-fast is dispensed with for 20s. or less in case of poverty.

But the soul of the papal hierarchy is the Mass, in which Jesus Christ, under the accidents of a wafer, is sacrificed afresh, for the expiation of sins, not only of the living, but of the dead. Public masses are essential to the antichristian Church: but private masses, handsomely paid for, are held to be far more efficacious for the salvation of such individuals, as purchase them. Masses are the golden harvests of the the priests. Philip IV. of Spain ordered by his last will 100,000 masses to be said on his account: but on condition, that if so many should not be necessary for his own salvation, they should redound to the advantage of his father and mother: and if they were already in heaven, they should be applied to the souls of those who should die in the Spanish wars.

The judicious historian of the Council of Trent, among the great exorbitances in the union and plurality of benefices, relates, that 'after the Lutheran stirrs began, and all men demanded reformation, Clement VII. in the year 1534, was not ashamed to commend unto Hippolytus Cardinal de Medicis, (who had been deprived of all his dignities for his unworthy conduct) all the benefices of the world, fe-

* Pufendorf, jus feciale divinum, §. XI. who adds a pleasant story, of an agent for masses, which colling half a crown a piece at Vienna, and little more than sixpence in Italy, he managed so well as to gain 100,000 crowns and the title of Baron, by his agency in behalf of the Hungarian nobility, who were put to death for their rebellion against the Emperor Leopold.
cular and regular, dignities and personages, simple and with cure, being vacant, for six months, to begin from the first day of his possession, with power to dispose of and convert to his own use all the fruits.

But I forbear to give farther instances of the fordid spirit of gain, which characterizes the Romish superstition. Enough hath been said to illustrate this part of Ezekiel's mystic allegory. Tyre, with her powerful navy, adorned with the images of her tutelary gods*; Tyre, the center of trade from the pillars of Hercules to the Ganges and the Indus, is not only proposed as a moral and political example to all commercial states, of the luxury, irreligion, and innumerable evils, which follow from the unchecked excesses of commercial enterprise: but, without prejudice to the literal sense of those splendid descriptions of the ancient commerce, the analogy and style of this prophecy leads us to the mystic application I have laid before you.

* Ezek. xxvii. 11.

Human
Human writings obtain the praise of accuracy and truth of composition, when the style and diction correspond to the subject, and clearly express the writer's idea. Inspired writings, claiming their origin from the Spirit of Truth, may be tried by the same test. If magnificent expression was employed on trivial ideas, it would be vain to have recourse to poetic diction and eastern figures. The expression of Scripture however sublime, is always temperate, and even below the ideas, when it proposes to our view spiritual and infinite objects, whether in a primary or secondary sense. Jeremiah, and our Blessed Saviour, describe the fall of Jerusalem, by the darkning of the sun and moon, and nature reverting to its original chaos. A more awful event is intimated, when the elements shall literally melt with fervent heat, and all things be dissolved. In instances more parallel to our present subject, when we read the fortunes of Egypt, of Idumæa, of Assyria, or Babylon; the description rises above the subject, and leads us to reflect on some other argument, analogous to the history, but but of more general interest and importance. The Assyrian Monarch, Sennacherib, described with so much elegance and sublimity by Ezekiel, as a tall and spreading Cedar,—So that no tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty; so that all the trees of Eden envied him; is the representative of another and a spiritual Domination, still more proud and imperious, and menacing destruction to the Church of Christ. The resemblance in their pride, their example and their fall, is so distinctly marked, as to lead us to the mystic and principal sense. To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, &c. v. 18. To whom art thou like, in glory and in greatness, among the trees of Eden? Yet shalt thou be brought down, with the trees of Eden, to the nether parts of the earth. And, to shew the extent of the mystic allegory, allusive to different subjects, the Prophet subjoins an application of it to Egypt. This is, or represents, Pharaoh and all his multitude, faith the Lord God.

9 ch. xxxi.
Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyrus, thus faith the Lord God; because thine heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god; I sit in the seat of God in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God. The king of Tyre, affecting divine honours, is a fit and expressive emblem of him who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he, as god, sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God. That noble prophecy or epinicion of Isaiah, furniseth a parallel to these places of Ezekiel and St. Paul. Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God. I will set also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds. I will be like the Most High. Here we discern the traits and features, not only of the king of Babylon profaning the Jewish temple; but of the prince of angels falling from heaven: the emblems of an ecclesiastical Monarch, self-deified, and rival of 10 Ezek. xxviii. 2. 11 2 Thess. ii. 4. 12 ch. xiv.

the Deity, sitting as god in the temple of God, and presiding over the mystic Babylon.

The Romish clergy have written express treatises on the adoration of the Pope. At his election, he is placed on the high altar, and adored by the Cardinals: and with still greater solemnity at his coronation. In the form of adoration, all things are submitted to his 'more than divinedisposal,' 'plusquam divinæ suæ dispositioni.' I use the Latin here, and in some things that follow; for our native English is abhorrent from such impious flattery. He is also adored in the masses, processions, jubilees. This adoration is not civil but religious, as the very word imports, being inapplicable to any but a person assuming divinity. The ceremonies performed, the benefits expected, and the resemblance to their own saint-worship, prove it to be a religious act. Hence those impious flatteries—'Quem Numinis instar Vera colit pietas.'—and that of an Egyptian Abbot in the Council of Florence, addresed to Eugenius IV. 'Pulvis sum et cinis, coram R Te Te Deo in terris verba faciens: et namque Deus in terris, et Christus, et Vicarius ejus: tu princeps regum.' Baronius and his epitomizer speak with much complacency of the Mohammedan prince who kissed the feet of Alexander III. and adored him, 'tanquam sanctum et pium Christianorum deum, unicum in terris deum.' Julius II. more a soldier than a bishop, was openly styled 'alter in terris deus.' His pontificate of ix years cost the lives of 200,000 men. One Puccius ascribed to the atheist Leo X. 'divinæ majestatis conspectum, ejus rutilanti fulgore imbecilles oculi caligant.' As Antichrist succeeded to the civil powers of Paganism, he emulated the Dragon in all the extravagance of the pagan apotheosis, new modelled on anti-christian ideas. The Emperor Domitian* was styled Dominus et Deus: and Caius had altars, images, and sacrifices. So the papal dignity has been styled Divinum imperium; and, in the ceremonial, Sedes

* The gloss upon one of the extravagantes speaks of Pt. John xxii. Dominum Deum nostrum Papam, in the very style of Domitian, Dominus et Deus nostrer sic fieri jubet. Sueton. c. xiii.
Dei: and the Canon-law affirms, that to violate the decrees of the Pope is to blaspheme against the Holy Ghost.

Ithobal prince of Tyre, affecting divine honours in the style of eastern despotism, was a fit emblem of that ecclesiastical power, which assumes the title of a Vice-God and Vicar of Christ. In the person of this King, more illustrious in his emblematic than historic character, Ezekiel not only predicts but describes the fall of the papal power and of its seat of Dominion; and the prophetic symbols are with admirable concinnity adapted both to the type and antitype. The assuming divine honours, is specified as the primary cause of the fall of the Tyrian monarch: y. 6. Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God, 7. Behold therefore I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness. 8. They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die the deaths of them that are slain in the midst of the seas. 9. Wilt thou yet say before before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man and no god, in the hand of him that slayeth thee. This whole context is less applicable to the personal fall of a king, than to the fall of a great polity. This polity is characterized by its secular greatness, and its prudence or reason of state: and the vice-god of Rome extends his pretensions even to infallibility, as well as Supremacy over all earthly sovereignty; while the Italian policy has been carried to the most vitiated refinement.

3. Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel: there is no secret that they can hide from thee. 4. With thy wisdom and with thine understanding thou hast gotten thee riches. 5. By thy great wisdom and by thy traffick hast thou increased thy riches.

The literal eminence of Tyre, in policy, navigation, commerce, arts and opulence, is verified in the Papal Cabinet; in the unequal returns of real opulence for her visionary commodities of bulls and pardons; and in the whole beneficiary and financing system of the Church and Court of Rome.

The DISCOURSE XI.

The lefus or elegy on the king of Tyre, in the splendour of poetic imagery is eminent among the sublimest traits of Inspiration. Son of man, take up a lamentation upon the king of Tyrus, and say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God: thou sealest up the sum of all perfection, full of wisdom and perfect in beauty. Rome hath in all ages exulted as the mistress of the world, in strength and policy, splendour and beauty, and even eternity. Thou hast been in Eden the garden of God. Paradise is the emblem of the Church; and all that follows in this elegy denotes an ecclesiastical power. Every precious stone was thy covering, the sardius, topaz, and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, and the jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold. He is compared to the Jewish High-priest in the splendour of his august office, invested with the Sacerdotal ornaments, especially the Pectoral blazing with gems. Emblems of the majesty of the Church, which the Papacy assumes. The antichristian harlot is described by St. John, as decked with gold and precious stones and pearls. The mystic sense leads our attention to the external splendour of the Papacy. Perhaps it may seem too minute to observe, that a passion for jewels and precious stones has been remarkable in the Court of Rome. Witness the Tiara, and the image of Loretto. Her taste for ecclesiastical music seems also intimated: The workmanship of thy tabrets and of thy pipes was prepared in the day when thou wast created, or inaugurated. 14. Thou art the anointed cherub, that covereth; Covering with expanded wings the throne of God: emblemized by the cherubim covering the propitiatory, and I have set thee so. Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God: thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire. 15. Thou wast perfect in thy ways, from the day when thou wast created: till iniquity was found in thee. The king of Tyre, as typical of Antichrist, is compared to Lucifer, the son of the morning, the anointed cherub, the regal Angel, nearest to and covering the throne of God. And I have set thee so: I have given thee thy original brightness. Thou wast upon the holy mountain, the emblem of the Church.
DISCOURSE XI.

Thou hast walked up and down in the midst of the stones of fire: allusive perhaps to that sublime description of the Son of God with a retinue of angels descending on Mount Sinai. And they saw the God of Israel, (the Second of the Divine Persons) and there was as it were a paved work of a sapphire-stone, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness 15. As the ministrations of the Jewish tabernacle were after the patterns of heavenly things, they aptly represent their own archetypes.

Erraticorum siderum per Ordines,
Per lacteas vehor plagas,
Velocitatem sæpe miratus novam;
Donec nitentes ad fores
Ventum est Olympi, et Regiam chry-stallinam, et Stratum smaragdis atrium 16.

The spiritual Author of the grand apostacy is, both in his original brightness and subsequent depravity and degradation, the fittest emblem of that apostate power, which 15 Exod. xxiv.

16 Miltonus, in obit. praefulis Elienf. p. 59.
fixed the throne of Antichrist in the purest and greatest of the Apostolic Churches; in the very bosom of that Church, whose Faith was spoken of throughout the world; and which, as the future seat of delusion and idolatry, was, even then, the subject of that prophetic caution: Be not against the branches: because of unbelief they were broken off, and thou standest by Faith: be not high-minded, but fear: for if God spared not the natural branches, take heed, lest he also spare not thee.

The causes of the divine rejection are thus specified: v. 16. By the multitude of thy merchandize they have filled the midst of thee with violence, and thou hast sinned.—17. Thine heart was lifted up because of thy beauty; thou hast corrupted thy wisdom by reason of thy brightness: 18. Thou hast defiled thy sanctuaries by the multitude of thy traffic. St. John, adopting these ideas, suggests their true interpretation. Thy merchants were the great men of the earth, for by thy sorceries were all nations deceived. And in her was found the blood of prophets and of saints and of all that were slain upon the earth.\footnote{19} In both prophets, secularity, superstition, and persecution are the characteristics of Antichrist: whose fate and fall is graphically described in many passages of this sublime prediction as applied by St. John. \footnote{16} Therefore I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God: and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire. This energy of expression is ultimately applicable to an ecclesiastical power long held sacred and inviolable, but which should be degraded from its conspicuous station on the Mountain and Church of God, and should resemble Lucifer both in his pride and fall.

17 Rom. i. 8. 18 Rom. xi. 18—21.

\footnote{17} I will cast thee to the ground, I will lay thee before kings that they may behold thee. It is probable, that the fall of the pontifical empire will be preceded by a defection of the popish powers of Europe, who will even turn their arms against her. Thus St. John, \footnote{20} And the ten horns, which thou sawest upon the beast, (to whom they gave their power and their strength) even these shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire.

\footnote{19} Rev. xviii. 23, 24. \footnote{20} Rev. xvii. 16.

The political phenomena since the Reformation confirm these prophecies. At that æra, many Princes and Republics emancipated themselves from the usurped supremacy of the Pope. The Court of Rome, though still treated with exterior ceremony and respect, has powerful prejudices to contend with, and has every day less influence over Princes. It has indeed been the maxim of the pontificate in the present century, to court the secular powers, and instead of lording it over them, to solicit their protection. Which leads us to expect a probable event of things, agreeing to the very letter of this Prophecy.
_I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations; and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness._ The machia-velian policy of Rome will be unavailing against those armies, which, not unexampled in their enterprife, will assault the very throne and capital of Antichrist, and will defile her brightness.

The ruin of this ecclesiastico-commercial empire, the Mystic Tyre, is predicted in the most awful terms: but the event being still future and perhaps distant, it becomes us, to collect from Inspiration such circumstances only, as are perspicuously revealed; and to content ourselves with a probable interpretation of such particulars, as are specified by Ezekiel. x. 16. Therefore, I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God; and I will destroy thee, O covering cherub, from the midst of the stones of fire. He predicts the ruin, not of a civil polity, but of an Apostate Church: I will cast thee as profane out of the mountain of God, the constant formularly to express the universal society of Christians: and this prophetic menace assures us, that the corrupted part, which absurdly assumes the name and honours of the Catholic Church, shall in God's appointed time be no part of it at all: but shall fall from an earthly hierarhierarchy, by a revolution awful and astonishing, as when the bright Archangel was hurled with all his legions from the battlements of heaven, from the midst of the stones of fire.

Thus saith the Lord God to Tyrus; shall not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee 21. Among the chief judgments of God on the throne and territories of Antichrist, the prophets frequently specify tremendous earthquakes 22. In our own memory, these concussions have been perhaps beyond former examples. In 1751 Lisbon was laid in ruins, by an earthquake which was felt in the four parts of the world. Very recently, Febr. 5, 1783. Sicily and Calabria experienced a dire calamity, in the destruction of more than one hundred towns and flourishing cities, with the loss of 40,000 people. and Nov. 16, 1784, The earthquakes still continued with some force in Calabria. By a later account, most of the buildings that had been damaged by the former earthquakes, were destroyed, with great quantities of grain, but few people. Calabria ultra is supposed to be undermined: and Naples is in great apprehension from Vesuvius, which rages more than usual. Great-Britain, to her immortal honour, sent immediate relief to Portugal. I wish the same attention could have been paid to Naples: and that we had received the accounts of that stupendous calamity, with a more religious sympathy. But alas! no earthquakes, even in their own capital, can awaken the supineness and impiety of a luxurious corrupted and irreligious people: though, it is hoped, every virtuous Protestant will lay it to heart.

The catastrophe of Rome by the combined elements of fire and water is the subject of many prophecies; which, when verified by the event, will probably put an end to scepticism and unbelief. Thus Ezekiel, v. 18. Therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee; it shall devour thee.
thee. and he resumes the subject, in that elegant allegory wherein the destruction of a maritime city is compared to a shipwreck. ‘Thy rowers have brought thee into the great waters: the East wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas. Thy riches—and all thy company, which is in the midst of thee, shall fall into the midst of the seas in the day of thy ruin. The suburbs shall shake—They shall lament over thee, saying what city is like Tyrus, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea. —In the time when thou shalt be broken by the seas in the depths of the waters; thy merchandize and all thy company in the midst of thee shall fall.—Thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more. And again, I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more; though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, faith the Lord God ²⁵ *.

²⁵ xxvii. 26—36. xxvi. 21.

* נ IPV ל ו ג ו מ נ נ י NIPLIGI folet vertere Symmachus. Grot. This is the true sense of the word, from NIP ו מ נ י inveteravit. NIP ל ו G E N I Y N LXX, whose translation of Ezekiel is esteemed the best of the Greek or Alexandrian version of the Prophets. Grotius dilutely interprets those expressions, of the period of Seventy years, during which Tyre was defolate, as Isaiah foretold, c. xxiii. In sempiternum, in longum tempus. Septuaginta anni, mensura communis humanae vitae.
The intelligent Reader of Holy Scripture, will consider the collected energy of those expressions—When I shall make thee a desolate city—when I shall bring up the deep upon thee—and great waters shall cover thee, &c. as too emphatical for any less idea, than of a great city and its adjacent territory falling into the ocean by the force of earthquakes and of subterraneous fires. Such was the fate of Port Royal in Jamaica, which hath been thrice destroyed, in 1692 by an earthquake, in 1702 by fire, and in 1722 by the overflowing of the sea. A catastrophe not improbable with respect to Rome and the Ecclesiastical State: and many of those horrors were verified in the late destruction of Messina. The soil of Rome, and of Italy and Sicily, abounds with sulphur, and by the effervescence of many ages is highly inflammable. Xiphiline in his abridgment of Dio *, relates the destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii buried under the ashes of Vesuvius. And in the next year, A. D. 80. while the Emperor Titus was exercising his humanity in visiting and relieving the distressed Campanians, a subterraneous fire broke out in the midst of Rome: and, as if intended to mark the divine displeasure against the Pagan Idolatry, it consumed the principal Temples, of Serapis, Isis, Neptune, the Panthéon, and the sacred edifices of the capitol.

* P. 1094 of Reimar's edition.

The ancient and modern accounts of Vesuvius and Ætna confirm the probability of the prophetic intimations. There is nothing more terrible in all nature than fiery mountains, to those who live within the view or noise of them. These are frequent in both continents of Europe and America, in the Asiatic oriental islands, in Iceland. But there are no Volcanoes, that deserve our observation so much, as those that are in and about the Mediterranean, the Vulcanian isles, Ætna, and Vesuvius overlooking the port and city of Naples. Alphonfus Borellus after the great eruption of Ætna in 1669 went into Sicily to view the effects of it. The torrent of Fire was sometimes two miles broad, (others computed, six or seven miles broad) and ten or fifteen fathoms deep, and forced its way into the sea near a mile. The Vulcanian isles are matter cast up from the bottom of the sea, by the force of fire*. Burnet 27 observes that a sulphureous soil, and an hollow mountainous construction of the ground, are natural predisponents of conflagration. The mystic Babylon is asserted in Scripture so to perish 28. Rome the seat of Antichrist will be consumed with fire, at the coming of Christ, or when the period of her apostacy is expired, in 1260 years from the rise of Antichrist. Italy is a storehouse of fire. Vefuvius, Ætna, and all the Vulcanian isles, will burst into flames. By earthquakes new eruptions will probably be opened in the Apennines; and near to Rome, and in Rome itself; which will be absorbed into a lake of fire, and sink into the sea; as is more than intimated in the Apocalypse 29.

* See Sir W. Hamilton’s interesting Accounts of the late Earthquakes, and eruptions of Vefuvius.
The civil powers, the supporters of the Great Apostacy, shall sympathize with her in her fall. Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their broidered garments: they shall clothe themselves with trembling, they shall sit upon the ground, and tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee. All this emphasis is disproportioned to so common an incident, as a maritime city besieged and taken by warlike kings, and again recovering its former splendour. Such a θερια is not applicable to the historic Tyre: which after lxx years desolation which followed the expedition of Nebuchadnezzar, became again a great commercial city subject to the Persian Empire. After it was taken by Alexander, it flourished more than ever, for many ages; it was the seat of Philosophy, the birthplace of the famous Porphyry. Under the Christian Emperors it became a renowned Archiepiscopal see, which perhaps improves the parallel: In the middle ages, it was involved in the Saracenic conquests; during the Crusades, it was possessed by the Franks together with Palestine, as fudatories to the Popes; till it was lost by the discords of the Christians in the East, and in 1291 fell under the dominion of the Sultan of Egypt. The ruins of the walls of ancient Tyre are still remaining; and the modern town of a mile and an half in circumference is thinly inhabited by 4 or 500 Turks. I infer from this short history, that all that was intended in Ezekiel's Prophecy was literally fulfilled in the fates and fortunes of that city. But the mystic sense of this prediction is only applicable to an event which will verify such circumstances as have hitherto no historic completion literally corresponding to them; but which are only applicable to the most awful catastrophe of present Rome, when by an eruption of fire the mountainous soil, being undermined, will fall into an abyss, and be covered with the sea*. Therefore will I bring forth a fire from the midst of thee: it shall devour thee. For thus faith the Lord God; when I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; when I shall bring up the deep upon thee, and great waters shall cover thee; when I shall bring thee down with them that descend into the pit, with the people of old time; and shall set thee in the low parts of the earth, in places desolate of old, with them that go down to the pit, that thou be not inhabited;—I will make thee a terror, and thou shalt be no more; though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou never be found again, faith the Lord God.

Our Blessed Saviour affirms that if his mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented in sackcloth and ashes. They would have yielded to the force of those miracles, which had not their proper effect on Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Jerusalem. If I might conjecture the reason of this declaration of Christ, I should ascribe it to the frequency of miracles in Judea, which had weakened their effect; as all our ideas are weaker, by often passing through the mind. But the same miracles would have produced their proper effects at Tyre and Sidon, where a miracle was never seen. Thus professed Christians are less moved with the sublimity and perfection of the Gospel which is familiar to them, than any virtuous and intelligent heathen would be on first hearing it.

The remarkable clause in the 20th verse confirms the Mystic sense: And I shall set [my] GLORY in the land of the living. *The Glory, thus contrasted to the extinction of the Mystic Tyre, is the intellectual Light or Glory of the Gospel, which will shine without a cloud, when the darkness of

S 3
278 DISCOURSE XI.

Antichrist shall be dispelled. The lxxxvth Psalm, so sweetly descriptive of the grace of Redemption, has a parallel expression, that Glory may dwell in our land. Thus the Glorious Land, and the Glorious Holy Mountain is constantly in Daniel a description of the Holy Land, and so, of the Christian Church. Thus in the New Testament Christ is styled the Glory of his people. Such is the very important sense of this Prophecy, the extinction of Antichrist, and the glory of the Church. The scope of such predictions is to support the Faith and Patience of the Saints; the hopes of virtuous Christians: that the spiritual wickedness and moral evil of this world, shall gradually disappear; and give place to a far more perfect display of the divine government, than hath yet been experienced on this our earth: a prospect too dazling for our present contemplation, but which I hope in my next discourse to represent in such a point of view, as to induce us to concur with the divine scheme of progressive Virtue and religious Felicity.

33 Mede. p. 816. Dan. xi. 45.

PROOFS
MAIMONIDES M. N. præfat.

Dicit Sapiens; Mala aurea cum maskijoth figuris argenteis, est verbum dictum suis modis: ad cujus dicti explicationem attende. Maskijoth five Figuræ illæ, sunt corpora sculpta, sculpturis perplexis vel reticulatis, subtilibus et perforatis, ad instar operis aurifabricorum; vocanturque ita, quia per illa visus transit et penetrat.—Ait, in verbo, quod duplicem habet faciem, h. e. in quo est aliquid apparense quod videtur, et aliquid absconditum, requiri, ut externum et apparense sit instar argenti, interius autem melius externo, ita ut inter illud, et externum, ea sit proportione quæ est auri ad argentum: deinde ut externum ita sit comparatum, ut possit Lectorem attentum de eo quod intus est docere. Sicuti enim mala istiusmodi aurea reticulis argenti perforatis obducta, cum de longinquo et fine attentione conspiciuntur, videntur esse mere argentea; propius autem inspexit a viro acuto visu praedito, ostendunt quid intus conclusum habeant, aurum vide licet: ita quoque in parabolis prophetarum

$\frac{S}{4}$ beatae beatæ memoriae, externum et apparens continet quidem sapientiam, quæ multiplicem habet utilitatem in conservanda et dirigenda hominum Societate; interius vero continet sapientiam, quæ nos erudit de iis, quæ in Religione sunt credenda et amplectenda. Parabolae autem propheticae duplicis sunt generis. In quibusdam enim singulæ voces rem aliquam peculiarem denotant: aliae vero sunt, ubi tota parabola rem significatam totam exhibet, in quibus multa quidem habentur verba, sed non singula pondus habent, et rei significatæ aliquid addunt; verum interficiunt tantum ad elegantiam, vel, ut rem tanto magis occultent et involvant. Sequuntur verba rationem rei illius, unde parabola est desumpta.

Page 242.

̀ë. ₆. Quandoquidem vero in sequentibus, præsertim cap. xxviii. ubi est threnus super rege Tyri, multa allegorice dicantur; vix possimus dubitare quin Spiritus S. Tyri propriè et spiritu-aliter dictæ judicium in unum cumulum conceperit. Ita ut quidem hic intelligamus propriè eam
It is observable, that the menace of utter destruction is fulfilled historically, only on the Continent., "The insular Tyre still subsists. Yet the mode of destruction agrees only to the latter, submersion and conflagration, which seeming contrarieties can only be reconciled or verified in the Mystical sense.

I. Splendorem, quaod ædes magnificas, rem nauticain, et vires conducitias, ὑ. 2—11.

II. Mercatum ejus, et commercia cum omni-bus ferme gentibus recenset, ὑ. 12—25.

III. Maximam ejus ruinam et deavlationem deplorat, et per antithesin amplificat. ὑ.26—36.

Sunt
Sunt tamen etiam intelligenda de emporio quodam alius generis, quod et Tyrus et Babylon adpellatur, ut constat ex Esai. xxiii. et parallelia Apoc. xviii. 13. ubi colon secundum de Babylonese usurpatur, quod de Tyro erat dictum in prophetia Esai. xxiii. 1.

Polano. p. 30. Longa sarebbe esprimer il contenuto de' Cento gravami. ma in somma si querelevano del pagamento per le dispense et assolutioni; de denari che si cavavano per l'Indulgenze: delle liti, che si tiravano in Roma: dell' riservazioni de' benefizii, et altri abusi di commende et annate: ———i quali riducevano a tre principali Capi—al metter in servitu i popoli,—spogliarli de' danari—et appropriarsi la giurisdizione del Magistrato secolare.

V. Fascic. rer. expet. et fugiend. I. 352.

Courayer. p. 59. note 3. Ce qui chagrinóit les Allemands, etoit de voir les exactions oneréuses de la Cour de Rome, la venalité de toutes les choses spirituelles, ces domaines immenses qu'ils avoient acquis, et qui en faisoient bien moins des Eveques que des Princes.—ces immunités excessives qui faisoient des Ecclesiastiques autant de sujets independans, et comme une Société tout a fait distinguée de l'autre.

P. 56. Il Card Mattheo Langi arcivescovo di Saltzburg a tutti diceva, esser honesta la Riforma,
This is the original of that description of Antichrift by St. Paul: ὥσε αὐτὸν εἰς τὸν ναὸν τοῦ θεοῦ ὥς θεὸν καθισαι. 2 Thess. ii. 4.

Mantuanus, in Alphonf. l. III.—venalia Romæ
Templa, facerdothes, altaria, sacra, coronæ,
Ignis, thura, preces, cælum est venale, Deusque.

PAGE 252.

Fra-Paolo. l. 2. p. 258. Erano commesse gravi esorbitanze nel numero de Beneficii commendati.
tanto che, in questo secolo, dopo nati i moti Lutherani, e mentre tutto il mondo dimandava Riforma, non havere rispetto, ne vergogna, Papa Clemente VII, del MDXXXIV. di commendare, ad Hippolito Cardinal de Medici, suo nipote, tutti i Beneficii di tutto il mondo, secolari e regolari, [di] dignita e personali, semplici, et curati, vacanti per sei mesi, dal che ne havesse presa la possezione, con facolta di disporre e convertir in suo ufo tutti i frutti. La qual' esorbitanza, sicome fu il colmo, così ne tempi inanzi non ardiva la Corte valersi di questo, dando in commendam un numero molto grande.

and a little after, a favor de qualche Cardinale, o gran personaggio, fossero uniti insieme trenta e qua-ranta beneficij, posti in diversi luoghi di Christianita.

Pallavicino IX. 9. contests this piece of History. But Ciacconius, tom. 111. p. 503, relates that Hippolito, who had been deprived for his unworthy conduct, had all his Benefices and Dignities restored to him in 1534. Courayer,
p. 404.

LXX. φυλακες, which suggefts the true sense; Those demons, mediating and tutelar deities, Τοι μεν δαιμονες εἰσιν, φυλακεσ μεροσων ανθρωπων.

Hesiod.

Ezek. xxvi. 11. The מַעָרוּת עֲשָׁבֹת מִזְבָּחָה of Ezekiel are the מִזְבָּחָה מַעָרוּת of Daniel xi. 38, 39. tutelary saints, expressed by antichristian writers under the name and idea of guards and fortresses: as in the distich of Venantius on St. Peter and St. Paul:

A facie hostili duo propugnacula præsunt,

Quos fidei turres urbs caput orbis habet.

Imperial Rome two towers of Faith contains,
To guard her safety on the hostile plains.

There seems a striking resemblance between the hero-worship of the Tyrians, and the saint-worship of Antichrift. They used their tutelar Hercules much as the Neapolitans do their St. Januarius. They bound him with chains, left he should desert to the enemy. Curtius. lib. IV.
J. H. Michaelis: Præterea factum est, ad superiorum vaticiniorum confirmationem et illus- trationem. Eftque in hoc Capite xxviii

I. Sententia in regem f. principem Tyri, cui superbian exprobrat, \(\text{ sư} \). 2—5. et poenam denunciat, \(\text{ sư} \). 6—10. II. Threnus super ejusdem excidio, \(\text{ sư} \). 11—19. III. Sententia adversus Tzidonem, \(\text{屠杀} \). 20—24. Promiʃsio colligendi Israelis, \(\text{屠杀} \). 25, 26.

Daniel
Daniel declined divine honours. ii. 46. The king of Tyre affects them.

\( \gamma \). 3. Rex Tyri propriæ fortasse nihil de Daniele audivit: est hic sermo, de eo qui Danielem novit.

\( \gamma \). 6—11. Consequitur, si quis affirmet se non errare, et id credi velit: eum sibi cor Dei affumere, et se declarare \( \alpha \varsigma \epsilon \upsilon \upsilon \alpha n \).

Occasus regis Tyri non est unius hominis interfection, sed deletio illius nominis et potestatis. Maria significant populos totius Mundi. Apoc. xvii. 1. 15.

\( \gamma \). 12. Threnus est \( \mu \iota \pi \epsilon \eta \iota \varsigma \varsigma \varsigma \).—Enumerantur hie prerogativœ ipsius, \( \gamma \). 12—15. Culpa, \( \gamma \). 15—17. Interitus, \( \gamma \). 17—19.

\( \gamma \). 15. Integer fuisset in viis tuis a die Creationis tuae: Hic distinguitur tempus operantis Mysterii iniquitatis et \( \Lambda \nu \rho \mu \rho \omicron \omicron \) manifestiti. Tribuitur ipse Integritas viarum ante revelationem injustitiae ipsius, et quidem a die Creationis ipsius.

Non
Non es in seculum.] Hæc est ἀναλωσις et ἀληθησις de quo loquitur Apostolus, 2 Thess. ii. 8. Cocceius.

Page 257.

J. H. Heidegger. M. B. M. diff. X. §. I. qua Papam R. divinitatem affectare, tum ex nomine Dei, tum ex osto attributis divinis, quæ sibi vindicat, demonstratur. §. II. Qua Papam R. sibi cultum divinum religiosum vindicare, adstruitur. The Pope assumes divine honours,

1. By making the papacy the object and rule of Faith P.I.§. 10
2. By assuming legislative powers in Revealed Religion 15
3. Assuming justifying powers of reconciling sinners to God 20
4. Assuming the power of remitting sins 27
5. Styling himself the head, foundation, and rock of the Church. 43
6. Transferring kingdoms, and affecting supremacy over kings 49
7. Dispensing with Oaths, contrary to the divine Law 51
8. Canonizing and creating Saints 62

The same Author proves that the adoration of the Pope's person is not civil but religious:

1. From the name of Adoration P.II.§.38
2. From the person pretending to divinity 40
3. From
3. From the titles, prorex, vice-christus, vice-deus § 43
4. From the benefits expected by his worshippers 45
5. From the ceremonies of adoration 46
6. From its resemblance to their own saint-worship 49
7. Dulia, hyperdulia, latria, are all held to be religious acts 51
8. The papists avowedly use this style 53

P. 449. "Ille fce ἀνοδιμένας δείσαντα quod Deus fit, 2 Thess. ii. 4. qui aliquid eorum quæ foli Deo competunt, fibi arrogat. Ita Optatus Milevitanus, lib. III. Donati Carthaginensis temeritatem exagitans, sic ei insultat merito: "Hoc modo exaltatum est cor ejus, ut jam non homo, sed deus, videretur." et paucis interjeatis, "Ad quem Deus sequitur, dicens, Dixisti, Ego sum deus. Ideo quamvis non fit usus hac voce, tamen aut fecit aut passus est, quod defectum hujus vocis impleret. Extulit cor suum, ut nullum hominem fibi comparandum arbitraretur: et de tumore mentis suæ altior fibi visus est esse: quia quicquid est supra homines, jam quasi Deus est. Deinde cum Episcopi Deo debeant famulari, tantum fibi de episcopis exigit, ut eum non minori metu omnes venerarentur, quam Deum. Hoc est, quod fibi Deus visus est." Rursus, "Dum Episcopus inter suos coëpiscopos non fuit, fuit, nec homo inter homines esse voluit; cons tat, quod extulit cor suum, et Deus sibi suisse videbatur." Compare Daubuz. p. 581, who cites this inscription on the triumphal arch of Sixtus V.

Oraclv vocis, Mundi moderaris habenas,
Et merito in terris crederis esse Deus.

PAGE 262.

Boniface VIII. added a second Crown to the Pope's Tiara, then called Regnum [see Du Cange, in Mitra, Regnum.] Urban V. added a third; by these odd and unbecoming distinctions, aiming at a supremacy over Kings and Emperors. In 1300, he celebrated the [first] Jubilee, ordering full indulgencies to all who visited the Basiliques of St. Peter and St. Paul, for 30 days. This Jubilee is supposed to be a copy of the Secular Games; but when Clement VI. reduced it to the 50th year, it was then supposed to emulate the Jewish jubilee. Urban VI. had three in a Century: and Paul II. four: merely to make more money. Boniface augmented the revenues of the Roman churches, with 50 thousand florins, collected in small sums from the infinite number of Pilgrims who resorted to the Jubilee, as Villani an eye-witness relates. La presse fut grande le jour ou l'on montroit la Veronique. Fleury. liv. lxxxix. n. 69. p. 550.

Laëtantius refutes the image-worship of the Virgin and all idolatry with a single sentence: dubium non est, quin Religio nulla sit, ubicunque simulachrum est: non Religio in simulacris, sed minus Religionis est. De Orig. Erroris, lib. II. c. 19.

Of Loreto, see 'Frauds of the Monks, 1691. Lett. IV.' and Addison's Travels. p. 95. 'who ever were the first inventors of this imposture, they seem to have taken the hint from the veneration that the old Romans paid to the Cottage of Romulus.

In summo cultos Tarpeiae Manlius arcis
Stabat pro templo, et Capitolia celsa tenebat:
Romuleoque recens horrebat regia culmo.'

Æn. VIII. 652.

The Hildebrandine Dictates, or the political system of the Court of Rome, is of a piece with her her theological doctrines, as expressed by Pius IV, who in the year 1564, comprised the decisions of the Council of Trent in the xii Articles of his famous Creed: enjoining the belief of

1. Ecclesiastical Traditions and Constitutions.
2. Holy Scripture in the sense of the Church of Rome.
3. Seven Sacraments.
4. The Council's decisions concerning Sin and Justification.
5. That in the Mass a true and propitiatory Sacrifice is offered for the quick and dead: and that in the Eucharist the Bread and Wine are transubstantiated into the body and blood of Christ.
6. That under one kind whole and perfect Christ and the true Sacrament is received.
7. That there is a Purgatory, and that the Souls there detained are helped by the prayers of the Faithful.
8. That the Saints and their Reliques are to be worshipped, and that the Saints intercede for us.
9. That the images of Christ, the Blessed Virgin and the Saints are to be retained, and that due honour and veneration be paid to their images.
10. That the power of Indulgences was left by Christ to the Church.
11. That
11. That the Roman Church is the Mother and Mistress of all Churches, and obedience is sworn to the Bishop of Rome, as the successor of St. Peter and Vicar of Christ.

12. That all the oecumenical Councils and Canons, and especially the Synod of Trent, are to be received and believed.

This Creed is added to the Nicene Creed, and is received on oath. Dedic. of Bishop Jewel’s works, 1611.

St. Jerome, a Commentator of the greatest genius, was so puzzled with the literal sense, as to express his doubts of the completion: Quod sequitur: nec ædificaberis ultra, videtur facere quæstionem, quomodo non sit ædificata, quam hodie cernimus Phœnices nobilissimam et pulcherrimam civitatem. Ex quo, quidam volunt, in ultimo tempore haec Tyrum esse passuram, quæ postea non sit ædificanda. He then has recourse to an anagogic sense, which is that of the best Fathers, Regem Babylonis diabolum intelligi, &c. in Ezekiel. lib. VIII. p. 400. he concludes, ‘Loca difficilia sunt, et prudens Lecto ac diligens debet ignoscere labori meo.’

In his Comment on 'Tu Cherub extentus et protegens,' among other things he observes, ex quo oftenditur, ad hominem urbis Tyriæ principem, hoc pertinere non posse: sed ad sanctam quandam et præcipuam fortitudinem, quæ urbis Tyriæ princeps posita fit. Here is a glimmering of the true sense: and more could not be expected in that age.

A modern Traveller in an History of Ali Bey's revolt from the Othman Porte, Lond. 1784, relates 'that Ali Bey endeavoured to reduce Said or Sidon, and in June 1772, crossing the Antilibanus arrived at Soor or Tyrus, which is 18 miles from Said by land.—Passing the isthmus, which is very sandy, you behold the ruins of ancient Tyre, which consist of the remains of the walls, scattered in different parts, and mostly buried in the sand: they are built of brick and stone, and their thickness is about ten feet. Proceeding to the West, about a quarter of a mile, you enter the gate of the Modern Tyre.—The walls on the land side are of stone; they are about 18 feet in height, and 7 in breadth; the circumference of the whole town is about a mile and a half; the inhabitants of the new town are about four or five hundred. I take the whole circumference of the peninsula to be about six miles.

Sidon is still in a flourishing state, inhabited by 16,000 Christians and Mahometans. Sidon stands on a neck of land, over against Tyre, and both form a bay about 16 miles in breadth.

PAGE 276.

Fazellus, in his Annals of Sicily, decad. I. lib. II. c. 4. relates, that on an eruption of Ætna a river of fire near 28 miles long fell into the sea at Port Longina. Ætna has been burning for more than 3000 years: as appears from Pindar’s description. Pyth. I*

---

Ætna

Γ' ἀεραῖα ςυνέχεις,

Νιφοεστ' Αἴνα, ἔφεσες

Χῖνος ὁχῖας τιθνα.

Τὰς ἐρευγοῦλας μὲν ἀπλα-

-τοῦ πυρὸς ἀγνοῖας

Ἐν μῦχοι παγαι. ἐν γειμοι

δ’ ἀμεραῖοι μὲν προχεοῦ, ὅον καπνον

Ἀθωνε. αλλ’ εὐ ὑφαινοι, τέρας

Φοινικοὶ κυλιδομενα φλεξ ἐς βαβει-ων βερι ποιῆν χαλὰς σὺν χαλαγω.

By Volcanoes and subterraneous fires, it is probable that the whole earth will be reduced into a fluid fiery Chaos—not, to emerge again (as Burnet and the Chiliafts fancy) into a para-

* See Mr. West’s translation and comment.
Discourse XI.

difiacal world, but to continue a fiery Chaos, the destined place of Punishment: the irreclaimable will not be removed from the Earth they loved, but will inhabit it in all its horrors. Quando perpendimus, Impios, tempore extremi diei, substitutos esse in tellure, ipsam vero terram igne interituram esse, 2 Pet. iii. 10. qui omnes illius partes, terram continentem, maria, flumina, faxa, ligna, et ipsa damnatorum corpora permeabit; non improbabilis est opinio, totam terrum in infernum fore.' Jo. Ern. Schuberti Th. dogm. p. 832.

Burnet interprets the Vintage του κεκρασμενου ακρασου, Rev. xiv. 10. of the Lake of Fire and Minerals: and very properly adopts that sublime adoration, xv. 3, 4. Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty! Just and true are thy ways, Thou King of Saints! Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for Thou only art holy! for all nations shall come, and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest!
DISCOURSE XII.

PROPHECIES OF THE ORIGIN AND PROGRESS OF THE REFORMATION.

Rev. X. 7.

But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the Mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets.

The Revelation of St. John, though never rejected by the ancient Church, and as fully authenticated as any part of the Canon of the New Testament, yet from the obscurity of the Prophecy before its completion, was less known and less studied than the Gospels, Acts, and Epistles. Perhaps it was purposely concealed, from being publickly read in the primitive Church with the other Scriptures, on principles ciples of prudence and loyalty, as it distinctly foretold the subversion of the Roman Empire, and the erecting another dynasty on its ruins. Justin the martyr, Irenæus, Hippolytus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, Cyprian, and Origen, authenticate this book as the genuine work of St. John the Apostle and Evangelist. The doubts suggested by Caius a Roman presbyter, in opposition to Proculus a famous montanist; and the objections of Dionysius of Alexandria, against the doctrines of Nepos a fanciful chiliastic, are not of that moment as to affect the credit of the Revelation: which was universally received by the Latin Church, most interested in its predictions; and Eusebius and the Greek Church concurred with the Latins, in venerating its authority as an essential part of the sacred Canon. In the age of the Reformation, Erasmus and Luther revived the doubts of Caius and Dionysius; and Calvin is improperly commended for not commenting the Revelation: neither himself nor Beza would suffer it to be explained from the pulpit. In the Church of England the whole book is excluded from from the Calendar; very unsuitably, in my best judgment, as no part of Holy Scripture is more edifying, or more proper to be read in Churches. Its obscurities are confined to a few chapters: and of late years, this mysterious prophecy hath been so accurately commented, that it is no longer, as it was to the Ancients, a light shining in a dark place; but since the day of the Reformation hath dawned, and the day-star of the Gospel hath arisen in our hearts, it is refulgent with the lusltre of Inspiration. From the excess of moderation in the first Reformers, it is apparent that the protestant sense of this Prophecy is no private interpretation, dictated by personal spleen, but agreeable to historic Truth, and the intention of the Holy Spirit. Providentially, the Church of Rome, so deeply interested in those predictions, hath never doubted of their authority: and the Book itself is so congenial to the ancient Prophecies, and so worthy of the majesty of Inspiration, as to claim our profound veneration, and careful study.

2 Rev. i. 3. xxii. 7.  3 2 Pet. i. 19—21.

The argument for the canonical authority of the Revelation are given with great accuracy by the present Bishop of Gloucester in his VIIth Sermon.

Nothing
Nothing in the Jewish prophecies themselves exceeds the sublimity of the exordium; the vision of Jesus Christ, the monarch of his Church; and the divine instructions to the Asiatic Churches, and in them to the Churches of all succeeding times.

In the Second Vision, heaven opens; the throne of God is surrounded by his Saints, and the Lamb opens the seven seals, amidst the acclamations of the angelic host.

In the third Vision, the Angels found the seven trumpets.

In the fourth Vision, the Dragon persecutes the Church; the two Beasts rise from the earth and sea, and are defeated by the Lamb.

In the fifth Vision, the Angels pour the Phials of the wrath of God on the kingdom and throne of Antichrist.

In the sixth Vision, Satan is bound for a thousand years.

---

1 Ch. i. y. 1—8. iii. iv. 2 v—viii. 3 viii—xi.
4 xi. 15.—xiv. 5 xv—xix. 6 xx. The
DISCOURSE XII.

The seventh Vision reveals the destined glories of the true Religion, emblemized by the New Heavens and the new Earth, and the New Jerusalem descending from God out of Heaven.

The system of the Seven Trumpets, under which we now live, includes the military revolutions of paganism, and the ecclesiastical fortunes of Antichrist in the East and West. The chief events are, the irruptions of the Barbarians, and the fall of the Western Empire; the incursions of the Saracens; the destruction of the Greek Empire; and the Reformation of the Church in the sixteenth century.

The reformation accomplished by Luther is figured by a mighty Angel, descending from heaven or divinely commissioned: clothed with a cloud, the symbol of the divine protection: with a rainbow on his head, making offers of reconciliation to the corrupted Church: his face was as it were the sun, diffusing the light of the Gospel:

7 xxi. xxii.
8 Ch. x.
and his feet as pillars of fire, intimating that his followers should suffer persecution, yet be preserved from the rage of their enemies. He is styled, a mighty Angel, not so much on account of the undaunted spirit of Luther, as of the great revolution effected by his means. He has in his hand a little open book, the original Gospel, open, as containing no new revelation; little, as applying only such parts and doctrines of the Scriptures, as refuted the prevailing superstitions. He set his right foot upon the sea, the emblem of war, and his left foot on the earth, the symbol of peace, intimating that the Reformation should experience the vicissitudes of both, but chiefly of the former. He cried with a loud voice, as when a Lion roareth: the Gospel was openly, resolutely, and efficaciously preached and published.

And when he had cried, Seven Thunders uttered their voices. 'As heaven signifies the station of the supreme visible power, which is the political heaven; so thunder is the voice and proclamation of that authority and power, and of its will and laws, implying the obedience of the subjects, and at at last overcoming all opposition?" Thunders are the symbols of the Supreme Powers, who established the Reformation in their respective dominions: Seven is a number of perfection, and, according to the great interpreter *° whom I follow, it denotes the Seven States of Europe, who established the Reformation by Law. 1. The Germanic body, in which, by the treaty of Smalcald, the Protestant Princes formed a distinct republic. 2. The Swiss cantons, 1531. 3. Sweden, 1533. 4. Denmark and Norway. 5. England and Ireland, 1547. 6. Scotland, 1550. 7. The Netherlands, 1577: these Governments received and established the Reformation within sixty years after Luther's first preaching against Indulgences. All other countries, where the Reformation made some progress, but without being established by authority, are described by other symbols. But the foregoing Seven uttered τας ἑαυτῶν φώνας, their own authoritative voices, to settle True Religion by Law, each in their own dominions.

* Lancaster. symb. Dict. p. 123; ° Mr. Daubuz. p. 469.
And when the Seven Thunders had uttered their voices, I was about to write. The posture and action of the Prophet is symbolical of the raised expectation of good men, that, when the Reformation was established in the principal kingdoms and states of Europe, the fall of Antichrist would soon follow, and introduce the glorious union of Truth and Peace on Earth. But a voice from heaven commands him to Seal up those things which the Seven Thunders have uttered, and write them not: to intimate, that the first Reformers would be mistaken in their zeal and disappointed in their expectation; that the New Reform would not soon be followed by the fall of Popery and the conversion of Unbelief; but that, by the divine permission, the free course and progress of the Reformed Religion should be checked by the power of temporal Princes, not in the number of the Seven Thunders. Such was Charles V. young, aspiring, selfish, and aiming by the influence of the papal system to make himself absolute in Germany. Such was his son, Philip II. a tyrannical bigot, who made it his principal object, object, to establish Popery and the Inquisition throughout his vast dominions. In Poland, and the hereditary countries of the House of Austria, the supreme Powers by persecution and ill policy prevented the establishment of the Reformation. France was the theatre of the most violent opposition to it, during the inglorious reigns of Henry II. Francis II. and Charles IX. and Louis XIV. half unpeopled his kingdom by his great Armies and by the expulsion of his best subjects, the Protestants. So that, according to this prophecy, the happy state of the Church was not then to be effected by the civil powers; but by some other means in some future time.

The Angel in the vision, lifting up his right hand, swears by him that liveth for ever and ever, who created heaven, and the earth, and the sea (by the very formulary, protesting against the demon-worship of the apostate church) that the time for the pure and happy state of the Reformed Church should not be as yet. ὅτι χρόνος οὐκ ἐστὶ Εἰ. But that in the days of the voice of the seventh Angel, when he shall begin to sound *, then the Mystery of God should be finished †, should be brought to its perfection. The Mystery of God is his counsel or secret design, of which Christ is the counsellor and executer; a counsel, which begins in the present conversion and happiness of man on earth, will terminate in diffusing that felicity over all the world, and complete it in a state of immortality.

St. John, representing the Reformed Church, is commanded to take the little book which was open in the hand of the Angel: which denotes, that the civil powers, emblemized by the Seven Thunders, would by the light of Holy Scripture settle and support the Reformation; and that the faithful must by the same Scriptures preserve and adorn it to the latest times. The Angel, when he delivers the book, commands him, to take it and eat it up: and it shall make thy belly bitter, but in thy mouth it

* Or rather, 'when he shall have founded,' οταν μελη συνήπτεται.
† τελεσθη. lectio Vulgata, τελεσθησθαι. Confummatitur. vulgare.

shall shall be as sweet as honey. The Reformed are to study, to meditate, and to obey the gospel, which is now an open book, in every one's hands. Swallowed and digested, it makes the belly bitter: it occasions, in certain conjunctures, temporal afflictions, exile, persecution, martyrdom. But in the mouth, it is sweet as honey; the mouth is the symbol of ruminating and meditating the word of God, and of speaking, or declaring it to others. In both respects, it is sweeter than honey and the honey-comb: productive of delight in God; of the divine consolations of Faith, Hope, and Love; and of the Peace, which attains the free exercise of True Religion, as it is contained in the inspired Writings. This circumstance of the Vision describes that inestimable advantage of the Reformation, the free and popular use of the holy scriptures; and the general diffusion of them in all the modern tongues is one of the obvious blessings of Protestantism, whose Creed is the Bible. It is probable that the little open book, has a peculiar respect to the apocalyptic prophecies, which are now so much illustrated by the great event of the Reformation.

9 Psalm xix.

The Angel concludes by assuring the Reformed Church, that its great work was still incomplete; that it must still continue to witness against the corruptions of the Gospel, both domestic and antichristian: that it must go on to reprove the antichristian superstitions; to correct its own errors and supply its own defects; and under the auspices of Divine Providence, to promote the cause of True Religion, Virtue, and Happiness.

Thou must prophecy again, before, concerning, or against, many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

II.

It is evident, from the scope and series of the apocalyptic visions, that the Seven Trumpets include all that period of history denoted by the Seventh Seal 10 viii. 1—6.

ment of Christianity, extends to the Great Sabbatism, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ". As the events of the first Five Trumpets are all past, and the events of the Seventh Trumpet are all future; the Reformed Church, commencing with the second * epoch of the Sixth Trumpet, is co-extended to its whole duration. This æra continues from Luther to the Church's last conflict with Antichrist; the prelude to her perfect state on earth. We of the present age, actually living under the Sixth Trumpet, are coëval with the Eastern and Western Antichrist; are witnesses to the declining state of antichristianism; and are so connected with the Protestant Reformation, as to be deeply interested both in its present imperfections, and in its gradual advancement, which is to occupy the long period till the mystery of God shall be finished in the perfection of his Church. Although the counsel of God will not be defeated, either by the indolence or malignity of man; yet it is evident from Reason, as well as the terms of this Prophecy (which places us under the immediate influence, not of a miraculous administration, but of an open Gospel) that this improving state of Religion and Happiness is to be effected by the instrumentality of men, in a course of measures and events not generally supernatural, though never excluding the divine direction and superintendence. From this view of the present situation of the Reformed Church, under some long period of the Sixth Trumpet, previous to a more perfect state of things, we may illustrate this proposition: THAT IT IS THE HIGH PRIVILEGE AND INDISPENSIBLE DUTY OF ALL WHO ENJOY THE BLESSINGS OF THE REFORMED RELIGION, TO PROMOTE ITS PROGRESS AND ADVANCEMENT IN THESE AND SUCCEEDING TIMES.

* The first epoch of the Sixth Trumpet is the Turkish Empire, 1453.

Let it not be imagined, that the present attempt to follow the unerring guidance of Prophecy by anticipating those views of Holiness and Peace which it augures to the world, originates from a predilection for that that waking dream of the millenaries; which, at first a Jewish delirium, took its rise from too literal interpretation. The prophets use the millennial emblems to express the spiritual blessings of the Gospel consequent on the conversion of the Jews and Gentiles. To give one instance:

And it shall come to pass in that day,
That the mountains shall drop down new wine,
And the hills shall flow with milk,
And all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters,
And a fountain shall come forth of the house of the Lord,
And shall water the valley of Shittim.

It would be a puerility uninformed in the first principles of the symbolic language, to understand this prediction of any other subject, than that which is now before us, the last and best state of Christianity on earth.

Nothing can be more chimerical, than those ideas of complete felicity, which have been drawn from such prophecies by the...

12 Joel iii. 18.
ancient and modern chiliafts. One popular mistake hath consisted in over-rating this happy state of things, which yet hath been often debased into a Mohammedan paradise; by supposing it to be such a state of perfection, as is absolutely incompatible with the condition of human nature. This error necessarily involves another, which is destructive of all honest and generous exertion on the part of man; that this happy change in the state of the world will be effected solely by the miraculous energy of the Divine Providence.

That golden age which is promised to mankind, as the result of the universality of the Gospel, is not a mere fatality, consequent on the divine prescience: but originates and ends in moral causes and effects, flowing from the intrinsic nature of the Christian Religion, and corresponding to the rational exertion of human means.

A great hindrance to the melioration of Religion and Society (besides those which result from the indifference of most men, and and the opposition of bad men) is that cold and timid caution, which prevents the more eminent part of mankind from imparting their own ideas, or approving those of others, either from a fear of committing their personal dignity and repose, or from an excessive dread of innovation. Hence, Religious and good men, even when invested with power to promote great and useful designs, have usually contented themselves with wishing their accomplishment; hoping for the completion of those Prophecies, which they might assist in completing. It is also true, that those who are destitute of power and authority, are too sanguine in their projects: yet the many reluctancies and hindrances to Reformation make it expedient, to use a decent liberty in projecting such improvements as may be received with candour; especially, if we advert to the wise advice of Plato, 'tantum contendere in republicâ, quantum probare civibus tuis possis.' But the Philosopher and the Divine, who would treat this subject in a manner becoming those titles, should abstract himself from all temporary and local regards; annihilating self and personal considerations; as a citizen of the world and of future times, actuated only by the pure and universal philanthropy of the Gospel; as without presumption, so without despondency, referring all to the wisdom and will and glory of God.

The true Reformation is the holiness of the Church, and of its individual members. Outward Reforms are only desirable as they promote inward Faith and Probity. With this principle ever in view, we may impart our ideas of such improvements, as seem adapted to the present times.

Private and personal Virtue, in any state of life, is an eminent mean of promoting the kingdom of Christ. It is giving one good citizen to the Christian commonwealth. Christian integrity is the true basis of public spirit and of enlarged philanthropy. Let every one who has generous views in private life, have a rational plan and formed intention to promote Christ's kingdom, and he will not want occasions of exertexerting it. In domestic life, such a plan will execute itself, by forming Christian Families, the constituent parts of the universal Church. But in stations of political or ecclesiastical authority, the good subject of Christ stands on the vantage-ground of usefulness, and has a more extensive sphere to move in.

Two important considerations favour the advancement of Christianity in the present and succeeding times:

I. The decline of Popery.

II. The civil state of the World.

I. It is a subject of complacency to a true philanthropist, that the Protestant Reformation hath in many respects Reformed the antichristian Church itself. It excited that indignation in the Seceders, and that shame or emulation in corrupted Rome, that she set herself, though faintly and scarce in earnest, to Reform some abuses. The Popish enormities grew to that excess, by neglecting the testimony of the witnesses of Truth in every age; and by resisting Reformation, till their remedy was as intolerable as their disease. Had the more moderate Popes complied with the demands of the first Reformers, they would themselves have had the glory of the Reformation: but that glory was not designed for them, because it would not have restored the purity of Religion. The concurrence of the Reformation with Literature and Humanity have, at length, softened the ferocious features of Persecution, which hath now subsided into a speculative Intolerance. Some few honest Popes perhaps intended more than they could accomplish: but had the Church of Rome reformed itself, even under such men as Adrian VI. and Marcellus II. the principal abuses, from the very genius of the hierarchy, would have still remained.

A liberal taste and patronage of Erudition in that Church, have in the last and present age, furnished arms to storm her own citadel, the papal supremacy; which hath declined declined so low, that the Popes, from Lords of the Christian world, are become suppliants to Princes of their own communion.

By some late regulations, his Imperial Majesty, whose character excites the attention of all the world, hath suppressed the religious orders of both sexes, who devote themselves to an idle and useless life: the Carthusians, Hermits, Benedictines, Bernardines, Dominicans; the Franciscans of different orders, the Minims and other Tribes of Indolents. The female religious orders, such especially as are not engaged in the education of young persons, have also been in part abolished: the nuns of Mount Carmel, of St. Clara, of St. Francis, and others; reserving pensions to such, as do not quit the Austrian dominions. In Austria only, above fifty useless Convents have been suppressed. In 1783 the great Reform in the Convents began to take place: the Jacobines, the Laurentines, the Ursulines, the nuns of St. Elizabeth, and those of La Porte au Ciel, were to have it in their choice, either to be secularized, or to to be removed from their convents. So that probably, before the revolution of many years, protestantism will be the established Religion of the Austrian circle of the Empire.

That opprobrium of humanity, the Auto de Fe, is discontinued both in Spain and Portugal. In 1780, the Duke of Modena, on the death of the Grand Inquisitor at Reggio, ordered that tribunal to be for ever abolished, its revenues to be applied to more laudable purposes, and the prisons and other buildings, which could preserve any memory of its having ever existed, to be entirely demolished. A happy Reform seems also to be in a prosperous train in the Two Sicilies, by applying the property of the Monasteries to the relief of the sufferers by the late Earthquakes*.

* See a political survey of the Roman Empire, by J. T. Dillon, p. 319. and p. 323, of the interview between the Emperor and the reigning Pope, at Vienna, in March 1782. Also, the Primate of Hungary, Count Bathiani's Letter to the Emperor, 1783. For other particulars here mentioned, see the Gentleman's Magazine, Vol. LIII. p. 703. Annual Register, 1781. p. 31. While I am writing these discourses, the Emperor has dissolved many Religious Houses, and even Spain has opened several Convents.
In order to the farther reformation of Popery; if the spirit of Superstition cannot be subdued, its noxious influence will be much abated, by depriving it of the deadly weapon of intolerance. Let Princes everywhere favour a toleration of all Christian sects, which are not hostile to civil peace: thus, without any shock to government, they will favour the imperceptible advances of Religious Truth.

There are two classes of men in all papish countries, whose disproportioned number and influence are pernicious to Society. The first are, those swarms of ecclesiastics of both sexes, who live immured in Monasteries, and incorporated in communities with large endowments. Of these, each living individual should have their option, either to adhere to a life of retired study and devotion,—a sublime and celestial life! or, disclaiming the hypocrisy and pretence of it, to become useful citizens, by carrying the virtues of retreat into towns and villages, into pastoral or literary stations, stations, and the endearments of honourable marriage. The absurdities of the monastic life, and of that forced celibacy which depopulates the earth to people hell, are too gross for this or any age, that has the least tincture of philosophy, of politics, or of true Christianity which accords with both.

Another class of men, by whom the world is widowed and desolated, are marines and soldiers. Reduce their numbers. Europe might disband by mutual compact half her armed force. Her relative strength would be the same: she would take breath and gain a respite from intolerable exertions. The splendour of military glory dazzles the eye, and prevents the discerning its fatal effects, not only in actual war, but in impoverishing the subjects, exhausting the revenues, and checking populousness and cultivation.

Tum genus humanum positis fibi con-fulat armis,
Inque vicem gens omnis amet.—

2. The
2. The universal Peace, which took place in September 1783, should it be (by divine favour) of long continuance, presents to the christian mind a delicious contemplation, both as a respite from the ravages of war, and as a fit and favourable season for the melioration of Society. The present state of the world seems in many respects auspicious to the great ends and objects of Christianity, as it respects human life and our mortal condition here, preparatory to our destined Immortality.

I. The civilization and conversion of rude and barbarous nations. II. The bringing back the relaxed and corrupted manners and principles of the Protestant Reformation to the purity and simplicity of the Gospel. III. In consequence of both, the diminishing the influence of Popery, and augmenting the general felicity of the Times in the free course of the Gospel of Christ.

If it be permitted to indulge a pleasing speculation, on the practicable means of verifying such Theories; we must premise certain certain postulata, such as, 1. That the improvements of Society be limited to such objects as have a general influence on the well-being of mankind, without refinement. 2. That the Civil Government, regal, aristocratic, popular, or mixed, should authorize and promote such improvements: and 3. That the wiser and more religious citizens in every community be employed to meliorate the mass of the people. To apply these axioms to each of the foregoing considerations: and first to that of Civilization.

I. A great part of Christian Europe is yet in a state of deplorable ignorance and barbarism, which still more prevail in the other quarters of the globe. The present state of the Greek Church will exemplify the means of Civilization, in the immense tracts of the Russian Empire, which occupies half the northern regions of Europe and Asia; governed by a politic and magnanimous Queen, emulous of advancing the improvements which were projected and begun by Peter the Great. Had that Prince been more enlightened by philosophy and religion, he would have merited the first rank of true Glory. The flavish, the superstitious, and brutal condition of very many nations, which compose that Empire, would exceed belief, if not so well attested by recent observation. Yet all concur in this truth, which is applicable to the state of Man in all parts of the world: that the gross defects in the national character result from want of culture. There are two characters in uncivilized humanity, which seem to oppose each other, and both to resist improvement; a spirit of imitation; and of habit. To divert them both into a right channel, must be the work of time and of successive changes. Yet a change in the national character from great rudeness and brutality, to that just medium between barbarism and luxury, which constitutes the true well-being of Society, may be effected in the course of one or two generations or successions, especially when the first efforts have had that success as to dispose men to farther advances.

From
From the late accounts of Russia, amidst an astonishing barbarism, I shall adduce one instance from the disciples of Mohammed, which should excite a generous emulation in Christian States.

"The Mohammedan Tartars of Kasan take a distinguished care of the education of their Children. They habituate their youth to labour, to sobriety—they are taught to read and write, and are instructed in the Arabic tongue, and in the principles of their religion. Even the smallest village has its chapel, its school, its priest, and schoolmaster*."

The happy effects of this very simple and practicable, but wise and exemplary institution, distinguish the tribe of Kasan, from the other barbarous provinces.

The gregarious and imitative character of man makes public institutions, which affect them equally and alike, far more efficacious, than the feeble and varying modes of personal care and instruction.

* Account of Russia, 8°. 1783. Vol. II. p. 23.
DISCOURSE XII.

Should Schools and Churches be established in every district town and village, by one comprehensive Edict prescribing a wise regulation of such establishments: the village pastor and the village schoolmaster (both the respectable characters sometimes united in one person, with a public competence, that he might teach gratis) would in a few years form a new race of men, of citizens, and of Christians, who would blush at the barbarous and bestial customs of their Fathers. In order to effect an uniform improvement, such Schools and Churches should have a public code of Education and Divine Worship, both of great simplicity and purity, without shocking the national manners and prejudices. Barbarous and fordid customs permitted to adults, but made disreputable in those who were educated on the national establishment, would grow into diffuse. Idolatry and Superstition, being kept out of the public Formulary, would be gradually neglected and forgotten. Translations of the Holy Scriptures, especially of the New Testament, ment, every where dispersed at the public charge, would at once civilize and instruct the youth; and tend to fix an uniform and standard speech, by a model of exact purity, throughout the empire. The great principles of Christianity, in the Apostle's Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Decalogue, should be everywhere the authorized method, rule, and basis of Religious instruction.

What is here delineated with respect to Russia, where there is so happy a disposition to adopt improvements; would be applicable to many other countries, perhaps to many parts of the most civilized: they would be applicable to Poland, to Hungary, and all the countries to the North of the Danube: they would be applicable to the northern and western parts of Great-Britain; to Ireland; to the northern Isles: they would be applicable to America, South and North: to India, and the East: and to the African Continent, so much neglected, oppressed, and enslaved. The success of such a process depends on its being being authorized and protected by the Civil Government, begun in infancy or childhood, and conducted by good men; for it requires only that common ability which is every where the portion of cultivated Reason, and that honesty which results from the first principles of the Gospel. The Error of projectors is excess of refinement, and high philosophical theories, which are never of general use. Such simple but extensive attentions, on general and well-concerted plans, would much change and humanize the barbarity, which still overspreads so great a part of the earth: and in its place would induce gradual and progressive order, industry, personal and social morality, and the saving light of Religious knowledge, faith, and piety, with all their divine effects on human happiness.

Whenever God is pleased to accomplish his designs to extend the glories of the Gospel, he will excite the hearts of Princes to be his instruments in diffusing Science, Humanity, and Religion: and he will, probably, excite the attention of Princes to such such glorious and beneficial designs, by the modest and respectful representations of Truth, of Reason, and of Literature.

In the education of the poor, the labour of the hands should always be united with that elementary instruction, which is here specified, in the principles of Revealed Religion and Morality: in every part of their institution impressing an early contempt of idleness and begging, an early habit of cheerful Industry. To this excellent and most useful of all virtues the indolence of human nature is very averse, unless habituated in early youth to patient labour and application. In capital cities especially, the health of the poor is impaired by a sedentary life and confined situations: which inconveniences are best remedied by active employments in the open air, especially, such as have a tendency to give some skill in Agriculture.

Agriculture is perhaps the only art, which governments must patronize, if they would have their people emerge from barbarism. In the rude but fertile regions of the uncultivated earth, Societies for promoting agriculture, with rewards and immunities to the most skilful and successful labourers, would much forward the national industry, civilization, plenty, and populousness. Mankind are by nature indolent and voluptuous, and would be funk in laziness and lasciviousness (as barbarians usually are) did not the difficulty of subsistence call forth their virtues and their exertions. The natural mean of civilization is Industry, united with Instruction, which is the industry of the Mind. Thus, Agriculture and the Gospel are the two great instruments of divine Providence, to check the voluptuousness and exercise the virtues of man. The great Poet almost divinely expresses the effect and tendency of rural labours:

---Pater ipse colendi Haud-facilem esse viam voluit, primusque per artem
Movit agros, curis acuens mortalia corda,
Nectorpere gravi passus sua regna veterno.—
Tum variævenere artes. labor omnia vict
Improbos, et duris urgens in rebus egestas.

Georgic. I. 121—146.

The
II. Previous to the discussion of the means of recovering the Protestant Churches from the languor or lukewarmness, brought upon them by modern luxury: it would amply recompense our attention, were we to develop those Prophecies, which relate to this period and state of Christianity: especially that exact description of the imperfections and blemishes of the Reformation, in the Lviith and Lixth Chapters of Isaiah. In the Lviith Chapter we have seen an exact specification of the enormous corruptions of the antichristian Church: Persecution, Idolatry, the Papal Supremacy, and incurable Superstition; threatened with the divine displeasure; and contrasted with the blessings and sanctity of the Reformation.
The evangelic Prophet having displayed the corruptions of Popery and the blessings of the Reformation, proceeds to reprove the vices, and to paint the decline of Faith and Virtue in the Protestant Churches; describing with a surprizing likeness, every feature of our present manners; both in external worship, and intrinsic religion. In ch.lix. The faithful Ministers of the Reformation shew the causes of the calamities of the Reformed Church, its deviations from the Gospel Faith and morality, specifying those deviations in several particulars; and their effects and consequences, in the decline of public felicity. The remedies of so great evils are also specified, confessing and reverting all the vices of the times: and, which is still future and perhaps distant, when the state of the Reformed Church shall be most depressed, most destitute of human resources, then the Son of God will be its deliverer, by a signal display of his power, in the protection of his people, the destruction of his enemies, and the conversion both of the Gentiles and Jews. The certainty of this great deliverance is founded in in God's federal promise of the perpetuity of the Reformed Church, whose perfection and universality Ch. lx. concludes this Prophecy. This defective state of the Reformation includes the whole period from its establishment to the fall of Antichrist; with a general progression, as we hope, towards better things and more virtuous times. The scope of this Prophecy is apparent, both from its place and order in the series of predictions; and from its internal characters, which are not applicable either to the idolatrous intercommunity of the Prophet's own times, or to the antichristian corruptions of Popery: but are expressive of a plausible exterior in the national Religion, with very great defects in Faith and Morals, and ending in that deliverance of his Church, which Christ shall accomplish in the last times 13.

I have not time or scope, to particularize the defects of the Protestant Churches there predicted; nor should I adventure to specify them, if all private and personal regards were not too inconsiderable to be even thought of, when we consider such public and universal predictions, as we have the infelicity to see actually verified, by the formality, the hypocrisy, the injustice, the indevotion, the want of Equity and Christian Love among professed Religionists: by the contentions, heresies, impious doctrines and flagitious manners, of the enemies and corrupters of divine Revelation. Some of the prophetic characters, which respect the formality and affected exterior of Religion, may seem more applicable to the last age than the present: others, more suitable to the present, than the preceding times of the Reformation. Speculative impiety, false philosophy, the sophistry of irreligion and infidelity, cannot be arraigned with greater force and evidence, than in those figures of the prophetic style:

13 Ch. lx—lxiii.

LIX. 5. They hatch cockatrice eggs,
And weave the spider's web:
He that eateth of their eggs dieth,
And that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.

6. Their webs shall not become garments,
Neither shall they cover themselves with their works.

Irre-
Irreligion is the source of evil: and, in the present light and evidence of Revelation, whosoever deserts its guidance becomes a corrupt citizen. If he is learned, he corrupts society by specious but always pernicious systems—of Materialism—Rationalism—and relaxed Ethics. If he is of the large class of the corrupt populace, the great and small Vulgar; he impudently avows his profligate opinions, by gaming, duel, concubinage, forgery, and every disorder. For there is no restraint on the conscience of that man, who either by his writings or conversation, either by his practice or example, rejects Christianity.

6. Their works are works of iniquity,
   And the act of violence is in their hands.

7. Their feet run to evil,
   And they make haste to shed innocent blood:
   Their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity;
   Wasting and destruction are in their paths.

8. The way of peace they know not:
   And there is no judgment in their goings:
   They have made them crooked paths,
   Whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.
The sad effects of practical and speculative irreligion are described in very awful terms:

v. 9. Therefore is judgment far from us,
Neither doth justice overtake us—
We wait for light, but behold obscurity;
For brightness, but we walk in darkness.—

14. Judgment is turned away backward,
And justice standeth afar off:
For truth is fallen in the street,
And equity cannot enter:

15. Yea, truth faileth,
And he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey.

He goes on to trace the crimes and the calamities which flow from this bitter source of immorality and impiety: and whoever is solicitous to obliterate those crimes and avert those calamities from the Protestant Churches, cannot have a surer guide to conduct his steps than this Prophecy of Isaiah: who particularly specifies the religious observance of the Christian Sabbath as one of the best means of Reformation 14.

14 Ch. lviii. 13, 14.
Religion itself is too often wounded in the house of her friends 15. Even the Protestant Clergy seem scarce agreed among themselves, whether they should teach the duties of an Holy and Christian Life. So far is this antinomianism spread, that the Christian Ethics are as much relaxed, as they were by the Jesuits themselves; and the people love to have it so 16. I enter no farther into the unhappy consideration of the fatal effects both of fanaticism and luxury on virtuous practice, than to observe that the privileges of Redemption, and the conditions of Salvation are inseparable in the New Testament, which certainly is the most moral book in the world.

One remedy for this great evil is a judicious plan of preaching the Gospel: by illustrating the life and maxims of Christ, and the writings of the Apostles, in a manner both popular and critical. The Ministers of Religion, if they would be successful, besides being examples of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity 17, should be very careful not to relax the duties and temper of the Gospel; but to oppose the selfish and voluptuous manners of the times, by enforcing special duties; avoiding those unmeaning generalities which reform no one, and descending to an exact detail of each part of Christian Ethics, leaving no evasions to pretended ignorance, by the clearest practical rules of devotion and eucharist, of moderation and self-denial, of justice and equity, of charity, compassion, and alms: pressing much on the people the shortness and the moment of life, and the interesting views of death and judgment, heaven and hell.

15 Zech. xiii. 6. 16 Jerem. v. 31. 17 1 Tim. iv. 12.

Of the peculiar doctrines of Revelation I will only observe, that they should be taught in the very words and ideas of Revelation itself, especially the divinity and sacrifice of Jesus Christ.

The education of youth should be a great instrument of amending manners. Let the ingenuous youth, throughout civilized Europe be formed to the systematic knowledge of the best things, as well as the best composition; through a regulated course of annual studies, Grammar, Rhetoric, Poetry, History, Arts, Philosophy, and Revealed Religion.

As a principal improvement in the literary education of the ingenuous youth, permit me to suggest that it be a Christian education; by laying before them select parts of Holy Scripture, in Hebrew and in Greek, and of the best ancient Christian Writers. There are exquisite pieces of Christian Antiquity, which would form the taste as well as the heart of a student: and a selection might be made from St. Luke and St. Paul; from Minucius, Lactantius, Prudentius, Jerome; Justin, Clement, Origen, Chrysostom, Basil, Macarius; and the Poems of Nazianzen, Nonnus, and Synesius; which might rival in elegance and far exceed in utility the very best Classics.

Thus have I briefly stated some obvious means of reviving the zeal and purity of protestant Christianity: but alas! the divine prescience, leaving inviolable our freedom to abuse his best blessings, foresaw that the Reformed and Protestant Churches, when Romish persecution should subside, would leave their first love, and too well deserve those characters of the Laodicean state, which probably was meant to be descriptive of our own at present. These things faith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot,—Because thou sayest, I am rich and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not, that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked. I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich, and white raiment that thou mayest be clothed:—As many as I love I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore and repent.—To him that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne.

III. The conversion of the heathens, Jews, and mohammedans is predicted as an essential in the amplitude and felicity of the Church.

* In hac imagine ecclesiae Laodicensae, nobis exhibetur status ecclesiæarum Protestantium.

X 2 The
The system of African slavery is a powerful obstacle to the humane business of conversion. A distinguished prelate * hath excited the public compassion to mitigate its horrors; but a politic and peaceful sect have set the example in their own district of abolishing it. They have freed their slaves, and allow them wages for their labour.

How pleasing would it be to indulge our hopes, that the present General Peace might be improved to extend the glories of the Gospel to the remotest regions of either hemisphere! and to multiply as well as edify the Churches! How happy, should God dispose and enable the kingdoms of Europe, at this time, to extend the knowledge and influence of the pure Gospel, among the Gentile inhabitants of the East and West; that the untutored Indian might derive from Europe the riches of Christ, in return for that ill-omened opulence which they have showered on us. In particular, the mild and gentle temper of the Gentoos, and of many castes and tribes in the vast empires of Persia,

* The Bishop of Chelsea, Serm. xvii.

Hin-
Hindostan, Tibet, and China, their frugal simplicity, and their commercial intercourse with Europe, are predisposing circumstances very favourable to their illumination by the Christian Faith. But alas! how shall they believe in Him, of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? as it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them, that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things. 18

Would it not be practicable, for the East India Companies, aided by their respective Governments here and abroad, to place Protestant Missionaries, acquainted with the popular languages of the East, in all their factories; and to favour their communication with the Mohammedans? For this purpose, the holy scriptures, especially the New Testament may be dispersed over the East in Arabic, Turkish, and Persian Translations. Such is my idea of that inspired book, that it finds it way directly to the heart, and conquers unbelief by a more than human energy.

18 Rom. x. 14, 15.

There are circumstances in the Mohammedan countries favourable to Christianity. In the past year 'the Grand Signor hath permitted to all Christians, whether Catholics, Protestants, or Greeks, the free exercise of their religion throughout his states. The Catholic merchants highly extol the toleration of the present Sultan, and the protection which he grants to all Religions.'

It were easy to demonstrate from the interior constitution of the Christian Religion, that it includes all the principles of personal and public good. With respect to the felicity of nations, a Religion prescribing moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality, will tend to the populousness and competent support of any country in any climate: prescribing godlike charity, it will mitigate the sufferings of human nature, and even the inclemency of climate and situation. It will also promote that firmness of mind and body, which averse to aggression, furnishes the means of defence.
The wisdom and sublimity of its principles have a direct tendency to improve human reason; to excite enquiry, meditation, comparison; to enable intellect in man to be superior to sense; and thus to re-establish the rights of conscience. The equity and kind affection, that predominate in this Religion, will have the best effects on Legislation, which, when tempered by Christianity, becomes not so much a strict executive justice as a kind of protection, asylum, and chancery, that tempers even punishments with lenity, and reforms or prevents vice, as well as protects virtue.

When I consider the Christian Religion as an institute of happiness, I do not mean Christianity as it is now practised in the world: I do not mean the Popish Christianity, which is either a profligate hypocrisy, or a gloomy superstition, which would exterminate the passions by a slow and dreadful suicide; of which we have memorable examples in some of the best men of that Communion. I exclude from my ideas of the Gospel, that antinomian fanaticism, naticism, which make Religion to consist in inexplicable Theories: much less, has the libertinism of the vulgar Protestants, and the customs of the present age, any pretensions to the name and honours of true Christianity. By this august name I mean that Religion which is described and exemplified in the New Testament, a Religion of personal, domestic, and public virtue: in which the passions are not extirpated, but governed: in which, God is adored through Jesus Christ, with love, admiration, fear, and gratitude: by which Society is continually improved and meliorated; while the individual is daily renewed and prepared both by the blessings and adversities of the present life for the endless felicity of the future 19.

RECAPITULATION.

This series of Lectures presents a connected argument for the truth and certainty of Revealed Religion, drawn from the completion of predictions respecting Christianity. Lecture I. It was expedient in the first place to state the general idea of 19 2 Cor. iv. 17. 18.

DISCOURSE XII.

Inspiration, and to give a short History of Prophecy. Lecture II. we proceeded to establish the most useful Canons of Interpretation; especially that, which addresseth itself to the sincere and unvitiated Common Sense of a wise and virtuous Man, resulting from the natural and obvious coincidence of predictions with events; exemplified in the harmony, between the Religious Prophecies, and the Life of Jesus Christ, whose Doctrines as well as Actions are enveloped in the prophetic theology. To these Canons were annexed literary observations on the mystic and double sense, on prophetic actions, and the symbolic language.

Lect. IV. V. A memorable circumstance then engaged our attention: that the Divine Author and Doctrine of the Christian Religion were announced to the prophet Daniel in the reign of Cyrus, with an exact specification of the very time of Christ's Ministry and the year of his Passion: with his signal judgment on the Jewish Nation after 40 years, when he sent forth his armies, destroyed those murderers, and burned burned up their city 20. The several characters of Redemption, there distinctly revealed were also shewn to be inapplicable to any civil or secular events, and a proper demonstration that the Religion of Christ being divinely predicted was divinely revealed.

Lecture VI. But as the Sealing of Vision and Prophecy is the principal distinction of the promised Saviour; this noble argument, drawn from the long series, dependence, and concatenation of the whole prophetic System, was stated, with sufficient examples to evince the certain conclusion, which follows from that admirable combination of separate proofs, resulting from predictions of the whole history of the Messiah, and of the most refined Doctrines of his Religion.

But in order to illustrate the greatness and sanctity of his person and character, both human and divine, it was expedient, in Lecture III. to represent his virgin-birth and sublime attributes; and in 20 Matth. xxii. 7.

Lecture VII. the perfect expiation of sin by his Death and Sacrifice.

Lecture VIII. IX. The agreement of Prophecy and History was shewn in a general view of the adverse and prosperous fortunes of the Christian Church, persecuted both by the pagan and anti-christian powers, yet victorious, progressive, universal.

Lecture X. We then viewed the Author of our Faith in contrast to that hostile power, which hath so long exerted its malevolence, in opposition to the philanthropy of Christ. This hostile power was shewn to have been described by the name and characters of Antichrist, and, Lecture XI. mystically by the Jewish Prophets under the emblems of idolatrous and tyrannic kingdoms, particularly that of the Commercial State of ancient Tyre, whose mystic allegory was shewn to coincide with the secularity and mercenary spirit of the antichristian Church, and with the enormous ambition of its visible head. It hath been demonstrated, that the Christian Prophecies have determined those mystical descriptions to the City Rome and her ecclesiastical Dominion. But the time and limit of these Discourses not admitting of a larger detail, one certain character of Antichrist, Idolatry and Creature-worship, together with various Superstitions, were shewn to prevail in that Communion: while the Reformed Church labours under evils of another description, unbelief, heresy, and relaxed morals. The present and last discourse, Lecture XII, points out the remedies of those corruptions, the declining power of Antichrist, and the moral means of advancing the promised purity, amplitude, and felicity of the Christian Church, probably on earth, to be completed in the heavenly State.

As the prediction of Events has an evident tendency to produce in all who see their completion, at least an historical faith: the prediction of Doctrines, properly meditated, has a still nobler efficacy, to improve that historical into a conscientious and religious Faith, adapted to its great purpose of Salvation. Thus in the famous prophecy of Christ's Passion 21, not only an historical event is foretold, but the causes and consequences of that event are laid open, in a series of Doctrines, proper to exercise not merely a faith of credence, but a faith of reliance on the Divine Person and Character predicted. In comparison with each other, the historical predictions, especially those which are fulfilled in Christ, are a gross and palpable demonstration, which is sufficient to bear down the most pertinacious unbelief, if reason be properly exercised: while the dogmatic and sentimental prophecies are of a finer texture, and require a spiritual taste and discernment, to apprehend their evidence, which is subsequent to the former kind, and leads to its proper conclusion, not only that Jesus is the Saviour of the World, but that he employs such and such means in effecting the salvation of them that believe.

21 Isaiah liii,

Thus I have laboured to construct a prophetic demonstration, of the Divine original, establishment, and universality, of the Christian Religion, under the auspices of a Divine Person, born of a Virgin, dying as a Victim, raised to a celestial Empire, and at length triumphant over the unremitted opposition of his malignant Enemy. His Divine Religion hath been occasionally depicted, as the most amiable and perfect system of rules and principles, for the advancement of Human Society, as well as supernaturally efficacious, to conduct every one of his faithful votaries to all the felicity of which their nature is capable, taking into the consideration both their mortal and immortal state: and armed with irresistible power to confign to the hostile and malignant party, in their punishment, as in their apostacy, all such faithless and unreformed mortals, who, in their present probation, reject their Divine Deliverer, and range themselves under the standard of Rebellion against God and Virtue, whether the professed Infidel, or the disloyal Christian. The clemency, the sanctity, the heroism of the Divine Mediation have been illustrated from the sacred writings, so far as our weak ability could reach so exalted themes. Nor were the obstacles which oppose themselves to a rational belief at all dissembled or concealed: difficulties, resulting from the very nature of of things, from the supernatural and miraculous agency, both in the Christian and antichristian Scheme. But it hath appeared, on the solid grounds of reason, that the prophetic evidence is of such force, as to surmount all the difficulties, which result from the mysterious counsels of the Deity. For, all Prophecy being the Inspiration of God, a predicted Revelation must be true in all its Doctrines however incomprehensible.

Much might be urged on this topic, and the argument ad verecundiam might be almost irresistibly pressed on human imbecillity, when it attempts to fathom the depths of the Divine System, whether of Nature, Providence, or Redemption. But you must acquiesce in this attempt to assert Revealed Religion by resting the stress of Demonstration on the Prophetic Evidence; while a feeble advocate for this noblest cause regrets that his powers of argument and persuasion are not more adequate to its dignity and importance. For, if there be aught in human life worthy worthy of a wise man's best attention, it is to know and obey the will of God concerning us in Christ Jesus. And I am persuaded that such an enquiry, conducted with the candour and diligence, probity and devotion which it demands, will terminate in a firm conviction, that the argument from Prophecy, when rightly and amply stated, is of that invincible strength as to sustain the whole weight of the mystery of godliness, a mystery without controversy great and august; God manifested in the flesh by a virgin-birth; justified by the Holy Spirit, the author of Miracles, and who spake by the Prophets; seen of ministering angels; preached unto the Gentiles; believed on in the world; received up into glory.

22 1 Thess. v. 18. 23 1 Tim. iii. 16.
This sacred book of the Revelation hath been sealed up for many ages, and did appear to all Christians, who did earnestly wish for the kingdom of God, as an unfathomable Mystery. But now, since the Reformation, God hath opened the eyes of men, and let them so much into it, as to conjecture and ground very good hopes, for the glorious approaches of the happy state of the Church.

That by the more sure word of Prophecy, St. Peter II. 1. 19. points to the Revelation of St. John, was the acute discovery of Sir Isaac Newton in his excellent observations on the Apocalypse, p. 240. and afterwards ascertained by Bishop Warburton, D.L. VI. 6. p. 304. and Sermons, Vol. III. disc. xi. 'The evidence of Prophecy is justly qualified a more sure word when compared to miracles, whose demonstrative evidence is confined to that age, in which the power of them was bestowed upon the Church: whereas the prophecies here meant (namely, those of St. Paul and St. John concerning the great apostacy) are always fulfilling even to the last consummation of all things, and so affording this demonstrative evidence to the men of all generations.'
The meaning is, to exclude all the period of time lapsing between the sixth and seventh trumpets from having any share in the perfection of that mystery: and this is as plain as may be from Rev. xi. 15. that the founding of the Seventh Angel shall give warning of the very beginning of that great revolution. To explain this, observe, that the subjunctive mood hath no future in the Greek tongue; and for that reason the aoristus is used, or else a circumlocution by the word μελλω, as here, which implies always the time to come. So that ἔτοι μέλλῃ σαλπίζειν—may be translated here, when he shall have founded the Trumpet. See G. J. Vossius, de Analog. lib. III. cap. 15.

Vitringa, p. 433. though he interprets the Seven Thunders of the vii Crusades as he reckons them, yet concurs with Daubuz in the scope of the prophecy: 'moram nullam temporis esse intercelluram inter clangorem Septimae Tubae et oraculorum propheticorum implementum, quod conjunctum esset cum pace amplitude et prosperitate ecclesiae, destructis destructoris Terrae.' He enlarges, as often elsewhere, on this sublime scope of Prophecy. See his fine comment on Ec. 7. p. 434—438, on xi. 15—19. p. 510. sq.
Nepos the chief afferter of the literal millennium, was a florid and poetical writer, like our Dr. Burnet. The topic is suited to men of imagination. See Mosheim. de Reb. Chr. p. 726, and Whitby’s judicious treatise: who makes it to consist, in the Conversion of the Jews and Gentiles, the Union and Universality of the Christian Church: and approves the sentiment of Oecumenius, ἐκ ἐν συναινεῖς ἑλπιδονομικα, μοθαδὸς ἡ Χιλιαὶς αὐτοκαλασίας.

The fairest and most reasonable ideas of Chiliasm were entertained by the great Mr. Mede. See his Life, §. 21, 22. and his Epistles. Dr. Thomas Burnet, in the Fourth Book of his Theory has illustrated the subject with much erudition, as well as adorned it with his romantic and bold imagination. Of the Ancient Chiliasm’s see his viiiith chapter. His own doctrine is summed up in his Review of the Theory: p. 405. Engl. Transl. 1719. ‘We must distinguish between a Melioration of the world, and a Millenium. We do not deny a reformation and improvement of the Church, as to peace, purity, and piety. All this may be, and I hope will be, ere long. But the apocalyptic Millennium, or the New Jerusalem, is still another matter. It differs not in degree only from from the present state, but in a new order of things, both in the moral world and in the natural. And that cannot be, till we come into the New Heavens and the New Earth. Suppose what Reformation you can in this world, there will still remain many things inconsistent with the true Millennial State.

This learned Author's own distinction should have taught him, that as the melioration of the Church is the proper subject of such prophecies as relate to Christ's kingdom in this world; so the proper subject of the Millennial Prophecies is the Celestial State of the Divine Empire. Hence, these Prophecies will be impenetrably obscure, till that state arrives, because we want ideas and expressions for those things which God hath prepared for them that love him. 1 Cor. ii. 9. from Isaiah lxiv. 4. As this part of Isaiah's Prophecies is the original source or fountain of St. John's concluding Visions in the Apocalypse: a comparison between them would assist us in ascertaining the sense of both.

Isai. lxv. 17—25. compared with Rev. xxi. xxii. Vitringa, whose genius brightens in his course of commenting this prophet, has, I think, entirely demolished Dr. Burnet's airy system. p. 911. Ad verum tendenti supponendum est, Prophetam sub sub Creatione cælorum novorum et Terræ novæ non loqui, primo utique sensu, de immutatione Statús Mundi, sive Cælorum et Terræ, naturali; sed de forma nova ac meliore in statum Ecclesiæ inducendā. Quod ad hypothesin attinet, quæponit, Tellurem, post conflagrationem, postquam novam aequa fuerit formam, rursus inhabitatum iri a justis statu Paradisiacæ Felicitatis; cenfœ esse inexplicabilem.—Reque intelligimus, posse Ecclesiæm curâ Providentiae divinæ, perduci ad longe perfectiorum in hisce terris statum; et audare Pace, prosperous, et copia etiam atque abundantia rerum ad vitam et usum necessariarum; sed absque ordine Naturæ mutato. Si Naturæ Ordinem mutes, quod facit doctissimus Burnetus, turbas omnia. Ecquid enim tanti est, Sanctos omnes resuscitatos in hisce terris per m annos bonis terrefribus ac temporalibus frui ad fatietatem, ut propterea Naturæ ordo immutandus sit? An minus habituri essent, si absque hoc felicitatis terrenæ millenario protinus in cælos reperentur? Vis omnis hujus sententiae cadit in locum 2 Pet. iii. 13. illustratum in Libris Observationum, IV. 16. Viderunt prudentiores, et in his Maimonides, M. N. II. 29. Sententiam suam hic docte explicans, phrasin Creationis cælorum ac terræ novæ esse propheticae et metaphoricam.
DISCOURSE XII.

Y 3 PAGE
The scope of the Emperor's Reform may be given in his own words, on declining the compliment of a Statue, offered to him by the inhabitants of Buda. "When I shall have been successful in my attempts to level all those prejudices, which stop the progress of human reason; when every individual shall join in a common effort to contribute to the security and welfare of the monarchy; when I shall perceive equity and good order presiding over the courts of justice; knowledge increased by the perfection of the means of acquiring it; the common people better informed; the clergy more regular in their discipline; and a solid harmony established between the Civil Laws and the Holy Precepts of our Religion: when population is enlarged; husbandry improved; industry properly encouraged; when manufactures are brought to consummate perfection; and their produce bringing in quick and safe returns: when, in fine, a free and unbounded circulation, pervading all the provinces, shall have opened a wealthy source of true ease and riches; as I wish and hope to see it one day: then perhaps shall I deserve a statue." Vienna, June 23, 1784. Signed,

Joseph,
Mr. Mede, p. 677, excellently: 'υποκρίσις signifies dissimulation—and this word we must repeat απὸ κοίνου—for all should be counterfeit. Lying should carry the counterfeit of Truth: the feared conscience a semblance of devotion: the restraint of marriage should be but a shew of chastity: and abstaining from meats a false appearance of abstinence.'

It is a just and fine observation of Bishop Taylor, diissua. p. 259. 'That the goodness of God does so prevail over all the follies and malice of mankind, that there are in the Romish communion many very good Christians: yet they are not such, as they are Papists, but by something that is higher, and before that, something that is of an abstract and more sublime consideration.' Yet, is it uncandid, to suspect the sincerity of a Rollin, a Fenelon, or a Pascal, in their profound respect for the dictates of the Church? Such is the artifice of Popery, that it has reformed its principles by the light of the Reformation. But as a sound judgment of Philosophy and Reason can only be deduced from their unassisted exertions before a Revelation: so a true estimate of Popery is to be made from Popery in its plentitude of power, without that influx of light which hath beamed upon it since and from the Reformation.
Anecdotes of the Russian Empire, by W. Richardson. 1784. 8vo.

Lett. II. p. 15. 207. 'The Russians apprehend, every day in the year is consecrated to some particular Saint. They are convinced, that every individual is under the protection of that holy person, on whose day he happened to be born; and all of them carry about them a small metal image of their tutelary Saint. Herodotus gives a similar account of the Egyptians.'

'In every house and shop, you see an image of the tutelary Saint: and, in days of religious solemnity, a wax candle or two is lighted before him.'

Of the flavish condition of the Russian peasants, priests, and soldiers, See Lett. xxviii. xxix. xxx. of the same work.

P. 252—254. 'The defects in the national character of the Russians arise from want of culture.—Immortal would be the glory of that Soverain, who would restore above xx millions of men to the rights of intelligent and rational [I add, of Religious] beings.—It must still be the work of time, and must be carried on by successive changes. But I quit such utopian speculations.'
Many of the parochial Clergy in Russia cannot even read, in their own language, the Gospel which they are commissioned to preach. Three Volumes of Moral Sermons translated from the English, French, and German were printing in the Russian Tongue.—The remedy is obvious; the Clergy must be better educated, better supported.'

'Few of the Russian merchants and tradesmen can read or write.' p. 109.

Of the serfs or peasants, p. 111.—'How can a country be said to be civilized, in which domestic slavery still exists?' Agricultural Society, instituted 1765. p. 151.

L'Agriculture ne pourra jamais prosperer, là où l'agriculteur ne possède rien en propre. p. 118. from Instructions pour le Nouveau Code.

P. 140. 'Many of the Calmuc or Mongol hordes, roving in Siberia, are still plunged in the grossest idolatry, and follow the religion of the Dalai Lama.—Engravings of the most remarkable idols are given in Professor Pallas's Travels.'

Translations from the Classics, &c. encouraged by the Empress, in 1768.

P. 217. Population of the Russian Empire, 22 or 23 millions.
Travels into Poland, Russia, Sweden and Denmark by W. Coxe, F.R.S. 1784. 4to.

B. III. c. i. p. 241. "In the largest villages we observed schools and other buildings constructed at the expense of the Empress, and also churches with domes, intended for the Polish dissenters of the Greek sect and the Russians who chuse to settle in the country."

P. 291. "At Moscow are above 1000 churches, with rude pictures of Saints; no carved images being admitted within the churches."

B. IV. ch. i. p. 436. From Moscow to Petersburgh. "Every house is provided with a picture of some Saint coarsely daubed upon wood, which frequently resembles more a Calmuc idol, than the representation of a human head: to this the people pay the highest marks of veneration." See p. 454.

P. 439. "Their progress towards civilization is very inconsiderable, and many instances of the grossest barbarism fell under our observation."

Of their incestuous marriages. ibid.

Of how great utility in refining and simplifying the speech of mankind, and consequently their reason, would be pure and exact translations of the Bible into the principal dialects, especially, versions of the New Testament, liberally and copicopiously dispersed, we may collect from a very curious Memoir of Professor Pallas, in the Gentleman’s Magazine, 1785. p. 693.
DISCOURSE XII.

The Empire of Russia, which extends over a great part of Asia, a country unknown to the learned till the time of Peter the Great, certainly contains more nations and people, languages and dialects, than any other kingdom in the world. The narrow space of Caucasus, inhabited by a people few in numbers, and contiguous to each other, unites more than twenty-two dialects of eight or nine different languages. Siberia, which is much larger, affords a still greater number; and the peninsula of Kamtchatka alone, whose population at the time of its discovery by the Russians seemed only to have commenced, contained nine various dialects of three heterogeneous languages. Most of these languages are much more strongly marked, and have much less resemblance to each other, and all those of Europe, than the European languages have retained of the Ancient Celtic.

PAGE 333.

בֵּיתֵי צַפְעְווֹז יֵכְעֶעַ וּבֵיקֵעַ לֹאָרָו

Vitringa. p. 783. Utrumque emblema eodem tendit, et clarissime ante oculos ponit profana philosophemata, foetus cogitationum et meditatio-

num
num animi, subtiliter et artificiose contexta ex varia cogitationum serie, subinde per modum longioris ratiocinationis ex hypothefibus assump- tis deducta, et ad formam demonstrationis sub- tiliter composita, quæ ad primam speciem occul- tant pestilens quid, quod intus latet, et incautos fallit; sed presta ab his, qui ea examini diligentiori committunt, deprehenduntur continere merum ac lethiferum virus; et ad usum, ad quem ordinata videbantur, hoc est, ad veritatem solide adstruendam, et veram Religionem distinctius percipiendam, nihil valere: cujusmodi philosophemata producarentur, publice vulgarentur, et excluderentur in illis communitatibus, quæ Romanensem communionem deferuerant, et quoque ab aliquibus illorum, qui earum partem faciebant; magno ecclesiae scandalo, et multorum exitio.

Nemo, non plane ignarus profanorum omnis generis feetuam et sophismatum, quæ pro infinita quâdam scribendi licentia et luxurie, quæ in florentibus protestantium terris dominatur, protrusa atque exclusa sunt, hisce circiter septua- ginta annis: non facile per se adverterit, quor- sum respexerim—ut post et præter innumeræ hypothese, auctoritati Scripturæ S. plane in- jurias, non contemnendo ingenio, et variae fæpe eruditionis literariae fuco, industrie ac subtiliter instructæ ornatasque, prodierint integra syyle-mata profanorum philosophematum, per modum demonstrationum mathematicis usitatatarum, dolose ac fraudulenter, licet subtiliter, contexta, ad incautos implicandos studiose adornata; exeuntia tandem in merum atheismum; luxata omni Verbi Divini auctoritate; soluto omnis societatis civilis vinculo; et sanctissima fide prostituta atque irissa.—Qui specimina desiderat, adire poterit Joh. Micælii Historiam Ecclesiasticam, auctam a Dan. Hartnaccio; Lips. 1699. 4to.

Both the Prophet and his Commentator express themselves, as if they wrote in fæce Romuli, in the very dregs of the xviith century.

PAGE 341.

Our late voyages have discovered a fifth part of the world, (New Holland*) of larger extent than any country that does not bear the name of a Continent. Introd. to Capt. Cook's last voyage, p. xv. The form and extent of our earth is now well known: and to borrow the words of the judicious Editor of the last Voyage to the Pacific Ocean, p. lxxvii. * Who knows, but that our late voyages may be the means appointed by Providence, of spreading in due time the blessings of civilization amongst the numerous Tribes of the South Pacific Ocean; of abolishing their horrid repasts and their horrid rites, and of

* By far the largest Island in the whole world, I. p. 164. laying laying the foundation for future and more effectual plans, to prepare them for holding an honourable station among the nations of the earth? Our having as it were brought them into existence by our extensive researches, will suggest to us fresh motives of devout gratitude to the Supreme Being, for having blessed us with advantages hitherto withheld from so great a proportion of the human race; and will incite us to persevere in every attempt to be his instruments in rescuing millions of our fellow-creatures, from their present state of humiliation.

Give me leave to suggest, that ships on voyages of discovery should be furnished with Chaplains, well qualified and well encouraged to make observations on Religion and manners of the barbarians, and to take opportunities of discovering the Christian Religion to them.

Of the Religion of the Friendly Island, see B. II. ch. xi. p. 403. 'The Supreme Author of most things they call Kullafootonga, who, they say is a female, residing in the sky, and directing the thunder, wind, rain, and all the changes of the weather. They also admit a plurality of inferior deities: one, who is the god of the clouds: another, who has the government of the sea, &c. The same religious system does not extend all over the cluster of the Friendly Isles. They do not worship any thing, that is the
the work of their own hands, or any visible part of the creation: and they have (what the author calls, perhaps inconsiderately) proper sentiments about the immateriality and the immortality of the Soul; they call it 'life, a divinity, or invisible being.' Here is a good basis for instruction, first in Natural, then in Revealed Religion.

Capt. James King, in the 3d Volume of the Voyage to the Pacific Ocean, p. 368. 'Besides the mildness of their government, the Russions have a claim to every praise for the pains they have bestowed, and which have been attended with great success, in converting the Kamtscha-dales to Christianity, there remaining, at present, very few idolaters among them. If we may judge of the other Missionaries, from the hospitable and benevolent Pastor of Paratounca (who is a native on the Mother's side) more suitable persons could not be set over this business. It is needless to add, that the religion taught is that of the Greek Churches. Schools are likewise established in many of the ostrogs [villages] where the children of both the natives and Coeffacks are gratuitously instructed in the Russian language.' These passages contain excellent hints on the subject I am recommending: and should have the more weight, as they come from so intelligent an observer, Qui mores hominum multorum vidit et urbes.

The inhabitants of as many of the islands as are brought under the Russian dominion, are, at present, converted to Christianity. And probably the time is not very distant, when a friendly and profitable intercourse will be brought about between Kamtschatka and the whole of this chain of islands; and which will draw after it a communication with Japan itself.

Rev. xviii. 1. And after these things, I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. The dawn of this bright day, which succeeded to the darkness of antichristian barbarism and ignorance, was the revival of learning. The Council of Vienne, A. 1311*, considering the ill-succefs of the Crusades in converting the infidels, decreed, that the Oriental Languages, the Hebrew, Syriac, Chaldee, Arabic, and the Greek, should be taught in public schools: and that the Sacred Scriptures in those languages should be applied to the conversion of the Saracens. This noble design had little or no effect in so dark an age, when all traces of foreign Literature had disappeared in the Latin Church.

* Heidegger. hist. papatus. §. cxxii.—et M. B. M. diff. xvii. §. xvii.—
In the next age, Universities and Schools were founded and restored: and on the taking of Constantinople, Nicolas V. humanely and liberally patronized and protected the fugitive Greeks.

But in the very epoch of the Reformation, by a singular Providence, Cardinal Ximenes immortalized his name by publishing at a vast expense the Complutenian Bibles, begun A. 1515. From this time, the day of Reformation dawned, and the day-star arose in men's hearts.

At the same time Erasmus gave his first Edition* of the New Testament, soon followed by his diffuse and eloquent Paraphrase. These publications were perhaps no less instrumental in spreading the Reformation, than the zeal of Luther, who nobly distinguished his retreat by a popular Translation of the Scriptures.

1. In Biblical Learning, we have now attained to that period, which furnishes the best materials for improved Editions, Comments, and Translations of the Holy Scriptures. In the last age,

* Erasmus himself published five editions of the New Testament, 1516. 1519. 1522. 1527. 1535. which last is reprinted in the VIth Vol. of his Works, 1705. His Paraphrases were first printed, 1517. 1522.

Luther published his German translation, in parts, from 1517 to 1532. Jo. Vogtii catalogus libr. rario. p. 103. 262.
two illustrious English Prelates formed and executed those great designs, the Polyglot Bible, and the Sacred Critics. Works of the same kind should be printed, at least once in every century. The Text and Versions of Scripture are now in a condition, to form a far more perfect Polyglot. The Sacred Critics should contain such Comments and Dissertations, as are not in the former Collections; and such, of all times, as deserve to be perpetuated; among others, the best rabbinical Commentaries with correct translations.

Among other reasons for Biblical Collections, the expence, and number, and bulk of the principal Editions and separate Comments, is so great, as to make them inaccesible to private Clergymen till it is too late to read them. That most useful edition of the Hebrew Bible by Michaelis, at Hall, 1720, is printed on so minute a type, as to be scarce legible to any but the strongest and clearest eye. All the Hebrew Bibles might be combined and represented in one edition, those of Michaelis and of Kennicott being the basis of the new edition, which should include all the variations, &c. from the first impression to the present time.

It were to be wished, that some portion of that wealth and patronage which falls in so abundant showers on the voluptuary arts, might might fertilize the neglected fields of Literature; and be employed especially in encouraging Oriental and Biblical Studies, which by a strange fatality, have been often ruinous to their most assiduous cultivators, as Le Jay, Castel, and many others.

2. The Writings of the Christian Fathers should form part of a system for illustrating the Scriptures: and it is to be regretted, that they should have been generally pressed into the service of Superstition by Popish Editors. There are many desiderata in this Class, and such Authors as Eusebius, and several of the Lower Empire, Photius, &c. merit more complete editions.

3. The Greek Philosophy, the noblest effort of human reason, has been so little attended to, that more than two centuries have elapsed since the publication of the works of Plato, which should be republished with all the platonists. Such an undertaking would be worthy of a splendid University: and the edition of Aristotle and the Peripatetics might at the same time occupy some other seat of Learning.

By distributing such designs to various places, a few years would be sufficient to complete them.
4. The learned Professions might be engaged in giving complete Editions of the Ancient Jurisprudence—the Ancient Medical Writers—the Greek Mathematicians—

5. History might be formed into a complete and regular series, ascertaining the Chronology; and giving the greater departments, the Roman, for instance, in its proper connexion.

6. The ancient Geographers, whose best editions are rare and imperfect, might be reprinted in one collection, illustrated with Maps and the Nummi Urbium et Populorum.

7. We have not yet a complete edition of Homer, illustrated with Comments and Antiquities. There are many good scholars, who never saw the Commentaries of Euflathius. How elegant a work would be the Greek Drama, with all the Scholia, and the best Criticisms!

How useful, the Greek Orators, of the Three Successions!

To accomplish these and other designs, would be the proper use of Royal Libraries and Typographies, such as that of the Louvre, so magnificently established by Cardinal Richlieu.
Solid Literature would be best promoted by Typographical Societies, under the auspices of Princes and Government, in capital Cities and Universities, wherever there are great Libraries printed and manuscript. The Ancient Learning, and the Literature of their respective States and Languages, and the best original and inventive Writers, and such as have enlarged the bounds of Science, should exercise the noblest of the arts, and, methodized in order of time and subject, should proceed from the press with the utmost attainable degree of correctness, beauty, and arrangement.

My idea is to represent the present state of Literature, without that anxious diligence of collating and commenting, which on any considerable writer would occupy a whole life. Sure I am, that Ancient Literature so methodized would very much shorten our labour, at the same time that it would extend true Science.

Isocrates, in Evagorâ. p. 73. Τας επιστολας ἑρμηνευς γινομενας, και των τεχνων και των αλλων ἀπαντων, ου δια των εμενωΠας τοις καθεσωτιν, αλλα δια τοις επαναπουνων, και τολμωντας αει τι κινειν των μη καλως εχουνων.

The 1st Century.
Augustus A.D. 31
Tiberius 15
Claudigula 37
Claudius 41
Nero 55
Otho, Vit. Vespas. 69
Bishops of Rome.
Titus 79
Domitian 81
Nerva 96
Trajan 98
Their numbers, and their faith celebrated throughout the world, 60

The IId Century.
Antoninus Pius 130
M. Aurelius 161
Commodus 180
Pertinax, &c. 193
Severus 194

Their numbers, and their faith celebrated throughout the world, 60

The IIIr Century.
Caracalla 211
Macrinus 217
Heliogabalus 218
Alex. Mamæa 222
Maximin 235
The Gordians 236
Gordian jun. 238
Philip 244
Decius 249
Gallus. Volusian 251
Gallienus 254
Claudius II. 268
Aurelian 270
Tacitus 275
Probus 276
Carus 282
Dioeclesian 284

Conversion of the Roman Church, 34

St. Cyprian asserts the parity of Bishops 254

Stephen assumes the right of appeal to the Roman Church: and lords it over the Spanish, African, and Eastern Churches 250

Victor censures the Asian churches 195
IVth Century

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
<th>Bishops of Rome</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Metrophanes</td>
<td>307 Marcellus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexander</td>
<td>317 Eufebius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paulus</td>
<td>340 Melchiades</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eufebius</td>
<td>341 Sylvester</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macedonius</td>
<td>343 Marcus, 8 m.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eudoxius</td>
<td>360 Julius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Demophilus</td>
<td>370 Liberius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evagrius</td>
<td>372 Damasus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gregorius Naz.</td>
<td>381 Siricius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nectarius</td>
<td>381 Anastasius</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Western Empire

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Valentinian I.</td>
<td>364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gratian</td>
<td>367</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Valentinian II.</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eugenius</td>
<td>392</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Honorius</td>
<td>395</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vth Century

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Maximus. Avitus</td>
<td>455</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Majorian</td>
<td>457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Severus</td>
<td>461</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interregnum</td>
<td>465</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anthemius</td>
<td>467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Olybrius</td>
<td>472</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Glycerius</td>
<td>473</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nepos</td>
<td>474</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Augustulus</td>
<td>475</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Eastern Empire

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Theodotius II.</td>
<td>408</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marcian</td>
<td>450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo the Thracian</td>
<td>457</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo the younger</td>
<td>474</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zeno</td>
<td>474</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anastasius</td>
<td>491</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Kings of Italy

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Odoacer</td>
<td>476</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodoric</td>
<td>493</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Martyrs were invoked.

Visigoths

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alaric</td>
<td>402</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ataulfus</td>
<td>417</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wallia</td>
<td>418</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodoric</td>
<td>432</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Vandals

| | |
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gunderic</td>
<td>461</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Genferic</td>
<td>467</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hunneric</td>
<td>483</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gundebaud</td>
<td>492</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thrasimund</td>
<td>498</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Innocent I. claims the right of Appeals to Rome
The three next Popes augment the Papal Power.
Leo I. claims the Primacy
The Council of Chalcedon decrees τα εις τη ωρτήσεια Felix excommunicates Acaicis, Patriarch of CP.
Gelasius claims the supremacy, jure divino VIth Century.

Greek Emperors.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Emperor</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
<th>Bishops of Rome</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Phocas</td>
<td>602 Thomas diae.</td>
<td>606 Sabinian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acilus</td>
<td>610 Sergius</td>
<td>610 Boniface III.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Emperors</td>
<td>641 Pyrrhus</td>
<td>639 Boniface IV.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Justinian II.</td>
<td>642 Paulus presb.</td>
<td>641 Deusdedit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine Pogonatus</td>
<td>663 Pyrrhus restored</td>
<td>654 Boniface V.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Justin II.</td>
<td>685 Thomas diae.</td>
<td>667 Severinus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Heracleianus</td>
<td>694 John</td>
<td>669 John IV.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Heraclius</td>
<td>698 Theodore</td>
<td>676 Martin I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodore</td>
<td>678 George</td>
<td>678 Eugenius I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodore restored</td>
<td>683 Vitalian</td>
<td>683 Adeodatus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paul</td>
<td>686 Calliniclus</td>
<td>676 Donus I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calliniclus</td>
<td>693 Agatho</td>
<td>678 Leo II.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

The Italian bishops protest against Vigilius.

Phocas began his imposture 606, in the very year when Phocas gave Pope Boniface III. the title of Universal Bishop.
VIIth Century

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Greek Emperors</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Justinian restored 704</td>
<td>Cyrus 705</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philippicus 711</td>
<td>John 711</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anastasius II. 713</td>
<td>Germanus 715</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodosius III. 715</td>
<td>Anastasius 730</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo Isauricus 717</td>
<td>Constantine 754</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine VI. 741</td>
<td>Nicetas 766</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo IV. 775</td>
<td>Paul 780</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine VII. 780</td>
<td>Tarafius 785</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Irene 797</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- Pepin makes the Pope a temporal prince 756
- Contests concerning Image-worship 725–794
- Charlemagne enriches the Roman Church, and confirms the Papal Supremacy, monastic vows, pilgrimages, canonizations, &c. 800

IXth Century

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Emperors of the West</th>
<th>Bishops of Rome</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Nicephorus 802</td>
<td>Nicephorus 806</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael I. 812</td>
<td>Theodorus 815</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo Armenus 813</td>
<td>Antonius 821</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael II. 821</td>
<td>John 832</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theophilus 829</td>
<td>Methodius 842</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael III. 842</td>
<td>Ignatius 846</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basil the Maced. 867</td>
<td>Photius 858</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leo philos. 836</td>
<td>Ignatius restored 863</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Photius restored 858</td>
<td>Stephen 886</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stephen 886</td>
<td>Antonius 893</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antonius 893</td>
<td>Nicolaus 895</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Irene 787, and Theodora 842, establish idolatry by Law.
The VIIth General Council, in favour of Photius 879
The Popes forge the Decretals, and the donations of Constantine, Louis, Otho

- John VI.
- John VII.
- Sisinnius
- Contantine
- Gregory II.
- Gregory III.
- Zachary
- Stephen elect
- Stephen II.
- Paulus I.
- Stephen III.
- Hadrian I.
- Leo III.
- Stephen IV.
- Pafcal I.
- Eugenius II.
- Valentine
- Gregory IV.
- Sergius II.
- Leo IV.
- Pope Joan
- Benedict III.
- Nicholas
- Hadrian II.
- John VIII.
- Martin II.
- Hadrian III.
- Stephen V.
- Formosus
- Boniface VI.
- Stephen VI.
- Romanus
- Theodore II.
- John IX.
- Benedict IV.
Xth Century.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Emperors of the East</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
<th>Emperors of the West</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alexander</td>
<td>Euthynius</td>
<td>Conrad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine IX.</td>
<td>Nicolas restored</td>
<td>Henry the Fowler</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romanus</td>
<td>Stephanus</td>
<td>Otho the Great</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romanus II.</td>
<td>Trypho</td>
<td>Otho II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicephorus Phocas</td>
<td>Vacancy</td>
<td>Otho III.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John Tzniifices</td>
<td>Theophylact</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>asil II. and</td>
<td>Polycrétus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine X.</td>
<td>Basilus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Nicolaus</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sisinnius</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sergius</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Leo V. Christopher 903
Sergius III. 904
Anastasius III. 911
Lando 913
John X. 914
Leo VI. 928
Stephen VII. 929
John XI. 931
Leo VII. 936
Stephen VIII. 939
Martin III. 944
Agapetus II. 946
John XII. 956
Leo VIII. antipope 964
Benedict V. 964
John XIII. 965
Benedict VI. 972
Donus II. 974
Benedict VII. 975
John XIV. 984
Bonif. VII. antipope 985
John c. & John XV. 985
Gregory V. 996
John XVI. 997
Sylvester II. 999

The lowest depression of true Religion in the Western Church, A. 1000 for 150 years, in a continued succession of 50 Popes, there was scarce one pious and virtuous man. See Abp. Tillotson's Rule of Faith, Part III. § vii.

XIth Century.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Emperors of the East</th>
<th>Frank and Subian Emperors</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Romanus III.</td>
<td>1028 Eustathius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael IV.</td>
<td>1054 Alexius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael V.</td>
<td>1041 Michael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine XI.</td>
<td>1042 Constantine</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theodora II.</td>
<td>1054 Jo. Xiphilene</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael VI.</td>
<td>1056 Cosmas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isaac Comnenus</td>
<td>1057 Eutratius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantine Ducas</td>
<td>1059 Nicolaus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Romanus IV.</td>
<td>1063</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Michael VII.</td>
<td>1071</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicephorus bot.</td>
<td>1078</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alexis Comnenus</td>
<td>1081</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Leo IX. 1049
Victor II. 1054
Stephen X. 1058
Nicholas II. 1059
Alexander II. 1069
Gregory VII. 1073
Victor III. 1086
Urban II. 1088
Pascal II. 1099

Berenger asserts the true doctrine of the Eucharist
Urban II. proclaims the first Crusade
Emperors of the East

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Century</th>
<th>Emperor</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th</td>
<td>John Comnenus</td>
<td>Jo. hieromnomen</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Manuel Comn.</td>
<td>Leo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alexis Comn.</td>
<td>Michael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Andronicus C.</td>
<td>Cofnas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Isaac Angelus C.</td>
<td>Nicolaus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Alexis III.</td>
<td>Theodotus</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Emperors of Germany

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Century</th>
<th>Emperor</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th</td>
<td>Henry V.</td>
<td>Leo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lotharius Saxo</td>
<td>Michael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Conrad III.</td>
<td>Cofnas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Frederic Barba</td>
<td>Nicolaus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>roffa</td>
<td>Theodotus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Henry VI. asp</td>
<td>Neophytus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Philip</td>
<td>Constantinian</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Lucas</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Kings of England

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Century</th>
<th>Emperor</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Henry I.</td>
<td>Michael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Stephen</td>
<td>Charito</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Henry II.</td>
<td>Theodosius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Richard I.</td>
<td>Basillus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John</td>
<td>Nicetas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Leontius</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Kings of France

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Century</th>
<th>Emperor</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Louis VI. le Gros</td>
<td>Baldwin II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Louis le Jeune</td>
<td>Baldwin II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Philippe VII.</td>
<td>Baldwin II.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bishops of Rome

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Century</th>
<th>Bishop</th>
<th>Patriarchs of CP</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>11th</td>
<td>Gelasius II.</td>
<td>Leo</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Calixtus II.</td>
<td>Michael</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Honorius III.</td>
<td>Theodosis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Innocent II.</td>
<td>Basillus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Celestine II.</td>
<td>Nicetas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lucius II.</td>
<td>Leontius</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Philip</td>
<td>Dositheus</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Eugenius III.</td>
<td>George Xiphilin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Anastasius IV.</td>
<td>Jo. Camarerus</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

XIII Century

French Emperors

- Baldwin: 1204
- Henry: 1206
- Peter de Courtenay: 1217
- Robert: 1220
- Baldwin II.: 1223

Emperors of Nice

- Theodore Laicaris: 1204
- John Ducas III.: 1222
- Theodore: 1255
- John IV.: 1258

Emperors of Germany

- Otho IV.: 1208
- Frederick II.: 1220
- William: 1250
- Interr. 17 y.: 1256

Austrian Family

- Rodolph of Hapburg: 1273
- Adolphus: 1291
- Albert I.: 1293

Of the Latin and Greek Patriarchs for 58 years, see Fabric. B. G. VI. 737.

Patriarchs of CP

- Arfenius: 1261
- Germanus: 1267
- Josph: 1268
- Jo. Veccus: 1275
- Josph restored: 1283
- George: 1283
- Athanausius: 1290

Vacancy, 2 years.

- Gregory X.: 1295
- Innocent V.: 1297
- Adrian V.: 1303
- John XXI.: 1316
- Martin IV.: 1319
- Honorius IV.: 1323
- Nicolas IV.: 1328
- Vacancy, 2 years.: 1334
- Celestine V.: 1334
- Boniface VIII.: 1334
- makes the pap. absolutes.

Innocent III. augments the Papal Power and Superstition, establishes the Inquisition, Transubstantiation, Confession, and the Orders of Dominicans, Franciscans, Mendicants,

The Santa Casa: 1291
XVth Century.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Patriarchs of CP.</th>
<th>House of Austria.</th>
<th>Bishops of Rome.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>John</td>
<td>Henry of Lux-embourg</td>
<td>Benedict XI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Athanasius restor.</td>
<td></td>
<td>Clement V.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vacancy</td>
<td>Louis IV.</td>
<td>John XXII.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Niphon</td>
<td>Charles IV.</td>
<td>Benedict XII.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jo. Glycyss</td>
<td>Wencelhus</td>
<td>Clement VI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gerasimus</td>
<td>Rupert</td>
<td>Innocent VI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Esaias</td>
<td></td>
<td>Urban V.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>J323</td>
<td></td>
<td>Gregory XI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Io. Calecas</td>
<td>John II.</td>
<td>Urban VI.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isidore</td>
<td>Charles V.</td>
<td>Boniface IX.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callistus</td>
<td></td>
<td>The Popes of Avignon</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philotheus</td>
<td></td>
<td>1305—1377</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Macarius</td>
<td></td>
<td>The Great schism</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nilus</td>
<td>John II.</td>
<td>Dante</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Antonius</td>
<td>Charles V.</td>
<td>Petrarch</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Callistus</td>
<td>Charles VI.</td>
<td>Wyclif</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matthias</td>
<td></td>
<td>1360</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

XXth Century.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Patriarchs of CP.</th>
<th>German Emperors.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Euthymius</td>
<td>Sigismund</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Joseph II.</td>
<td>Albert II.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Metrophanes</td>
<td>Frederick III.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>George</td>
<td>Maximilian I.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>John XXIII.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Vacant 3 years</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Post capets CP.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Geo. Scholarius</td>
<td>1404</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isidorus, &amp;c.</td>
<td>1406</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maximus, &amp;c.</td>
<td>1409</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Kings of France.</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Louis X. Hutin</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles IV.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Philip VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John II.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Charles VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Popes of Rome.</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Benedict XI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John XXII.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benedict XII.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocent VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urban V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gregory XI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urban VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boniface IX.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Popes of Avignon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1305—1377</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Great schism</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dante</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petrarch</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wyclif</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Popes of Rome.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Popes of Rome.</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Benedict XI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>John XXII.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benedict XII.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clement VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Innocent VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urban V.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gregory XI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urban VI.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Boniface IX.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Popes of Avignon</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1305—1377</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Great schism</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dante</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petrarch</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wyclif</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
XVIIth Century.

Ottoman Emperors. Patriarchs of CP. German Emperors. Bishops of Rom.

Selim 1512 Pachomius, &c. 1512 Charles V. 1519 Pius III.
Soliman II. 1520 Metrophanes 1566 Ferdinand I. 1558 Julius II.
Selim II. 1566 Jeremias 1572 Maximilian II. 1564 Leo X.
Amurat III. 1574 Theoleptus 1587 Rodolph II. 1576 Adrian VI.
Mahomet III. 1595 Matthaeus 1594 Clement VII.
Neophytus 1599 Paul III.
Matthaeus 1600 Julius III.
Raphael

Council of Lateran 1512—1517
Luther and Zuinglius 1517
Council of Cologne 1536
Council of Trent 1545—1563
Massacre of Paris 1572
Edict of Nantz restores the Peace of Religion 1598

XVIIIth Century.

Achmet I. 1604 Cyrillus Lucaris Matthias 1612 Leo XI.
Mustapha Osman 1617 vicario nemine 1609 Ferdinand II. 1619 Paul V.
Amurat IV. 1623 Cyr. Luc. Patr. 1621 Ferdinand III. 1637 Gregory XV.
Ibrahim 1649 strangulatus 1657 Leopold 1658 Urban VIII.
Mahomet IV. 1655 Parthenius 1639 Innocent X.
Soliman III. 1687 Gabriel 1657 Alexander VII.
Achmet II. 1690 Clemens 1662 Clement IX.
Mustapha II. 1695 Dionysius 1671 Clement X.
Callinicus 1687 Innocent XI.
Gabriel 1700 Alexander VIII.

Massacre in the Valteline 1620 Innocent XII.
Victories of Gustavus Adolphus 1630
The Irish Massacre 1641
Massacre in Piedmont 1655

XVIIIth Century.

Caesar.

Achmet III. 1703 Peter the Great 1682 Joseph I. 1705 Clement XI.
Mahomet V. 1730 Catharine I. 1725 Charles VI. 1711 Innocent XIII.
Ofman III. 1754 Peter II. 1727 Charles VII. 1741 Benedict XIII.
Mustapha III. 1757 Anne 1730 Francis I. 1745 Clement XII.
Abdhal Ahmet 1774 John III. 1740 Joseph II. 1765 Benedict XIV.
Elizabeth 1741 Clement XIII.
Peter III. 23rd 1762 Clement XIV.
Catharine II. 1762 Pius VI.